

Humanity is falling

This novel is just a fictional story written to say that the world will not go astray.

Those who are bored with refugees' arrival when they come, some here and some there, what would happen if people flocked to Europe in the wake of the nuclear war?

1.1 India

Between the years nineteen ninety-three and two thousand and twenty-five, many years, they rolled by as fast as the Indian rainy season. It has permanently lost the Gandhi nation's face in the new world's economic arena. The country lost Gandhi's philosophy, abandoned that man, and traveled blindly in opposition to Gandhi's life dream. Thirty-two years and thirty-two eras have passed for the oblivion of the Indian people immersed in cinema. In the year two thousand and twenty-fifth general elections, the Indian people elected a Hindu Nationalist Party. 'Tell big lies, and people will easily believe it,' said Hitler. It will be believed in India and Eelam wherever it not believe. The human race increasingly forgets histories around the world. It is historically imperative that forgotten history has rewritten. As long as the world exists, its back soreness is not going away, and that time has come to be true again.

The Mumbai riots in 1992 and 1993 against the Muslims continued to stink with the stench minds of the minority Islamic people. Unaware of the riots' atrocities, Hindu fanatics began to brandish knives again. They forgot history and planned to rewrite it. The relentless echo of the question of whether there is a place in the world that respects humanity continued. The situations in which some Muslims are living in India see their own country as alien. When a country alienates someone, it becomes inevitable that he will see that country as alien. Many of the sorrows of hatred curl up in the dark corners of human minds like venom cobra. They reap destruction when they rot.

Instead of the poor's moral anger over the rich, the rich's wrath over the poor is rampant in this modern world. That, in turn, has become the cursed fate of this new age. The poor are becoming poorer and poorer everywhere, and the rich are getting richer and richer around the world.

The exploited are becoming more and more controlled, and the slaves are becoming more and more slaves.

Man is only sharpening his face as racism, sectarianism, and casteism. Even if he understands its ugliness, He puts it aside for selfishness. India's economic growth has not reduced the poor's productivity and prosperity. It further fertilized the development of the slums. As the facilities increased, so did the desires of the affluent. That justified even atrocities in the pursuit of passion. The sight of unsympathetic human beings was far worse than that of predators.

On Saturday, the fourteenth day of June, the two thousand and twenty-fifth year. A few days passed peacefully in India after the election. Some Hindu extremist politicians lurked in their minds like hidden live coals of fire under ashes, looking at time with disgust and anger, waiting for some order. It was only in the Muslim-majority areas that the Hindu extremist party's defeat tormented them. It caused severe hatred against these minorities by Hindu extremists. They were waiting for the opportunity to implement the party's implicit policy of uprooting a minority race that was not subservient to Hindutva. Many countries around the world are working diligently to dissolve or impregnate minorities. Though a thousand peace waves are said to be waxing it, the perverse plans behind the scenes carried out without fuss.

The perverse joy that an opportunity had come to them was now beginning to weed out their addiction. They did not have the patience to wait for an Ayodhya mosque problem. This action decided to start it on Saturday night by planning it as per the party's order. Artificial insemination of riot is not difficult in a country where the ordinary people are the least educated. This incident can do as quickly as throwing a stone at a Wasp nest.

A little hidden place near the night market, playing hide and seek in the dark. In the darkness, the temple of the goddess Kali lay in ruins. A lorry came speeding by in front of the temple. From it, a cow with a stomach sticking out lower down. Three Muslims came down with swords and hammers. Then they talked to someone with a cell phone and beat the cow in a front temple with a hammer. It fell to the ground screaming. They quickly cut its neck and let ran the blood in front of the temple. They peeled its skin a little. Many men in the opposite direction rushed towards the temple with weapons as they expected.

Seeing this, the three climbed back into the lorry and hurriedly changed their clothes. They untied the three Muslims who had their hands and legs tied and pushed them out of the truck. Before the Muslims could guess what was going on, the deceitful Hindus jumped out of the lorry and started attacking the Muslims lying on the ground.

The crowd rushed towards them and joined them. And the Mumbai riots began in the year two thousand and twenty-five. The first three Muslims killed do not understand why they kill, and they died because of the sin of born in a country like India. When that riot was over, only corpses and immortal scars remained.

That scar made many people think against their own country. The majority of the people overwhelmingly welcomed the ruling Hindu party. The laws passed by them tightly closed all the pages for the Muslim people's free life. Their anger and helplessness ignited the frenzy that the country's fall would liberate them. No one could ask loud when Hitler usurped the rights of the Jews. When they took away Muslims' rights in India, no one asked against them firmly. Humanity lost on economic calculation. What is the grace from time-delayed judgments? What is the drain of mercy there? Can they only raise a voice of concern in front of the grave of destruction? Sometimes you can forget that too. Isn't Eelam a historical lesson in the genocide at India's mercy?

1.2 Sri Lanka

Sunday, the eleventh day of January, two thousand and twenty-six. At the end of the evening, when the heat subsided. Sun evolved into a fiery red sphere. Gradually he touched the sea. He began to linger in the weather's heat and slowly foot-swinging in the ocean. Ravana's country mugs set fire in front of him, saying that the sun was dying in blood.

Some other faces stood around the sun and signaled that they had swept the killing field. They showed the nudity that this is the color of the battlefield. It will bring back memories of the mind-boggling history. As if you were showing me the color of death, every day who always sees deaths without witnesses. Sun thought to get rid of the world by drowning in blood depths. The sadness darkened bored clouds of color at the end. The destination was slowly swayed by the unknown. Blood was pouring everywhere, and the sky was shaking as the journey set off without knowing the path.

Bandaranaike International Airport has left traces of war in its mane. Now radiant with peace. It was liberating itself from military occupation. With pride continues to welcome passengers as Sri Lanka's largest airport. The only annoyance of being the main airport of a fenced country with politics where invincible selfishness is enduring pain for the one who can see the truth.

Abdul Kadhar is five feet eight inches tall. His eyes filled with anger, and he lost his patience. He was in some unbearable agony. Saw the clock often. He took a handkerchief and wiped the sweat from his face and neck. The wait is awful. Whether it is love or duty, the wait is horrible. Abdul Kadhar wore a white hat worn by Muslims on his head. Despite having a mustache and beard according to religion, the famine of its size added beauty. He also wanted religion to modernize over time. He did not like to wander mustache and beard with new scissors like the Imams. At the same time, he did not dare to abandon his religion altogether. He concludes that religion is the lifeblood of man. He considered how Allah had shown him to be the reason for standing here now. On the whole, his beard and mustache, trimmed in the peace of religion and the modern age, made his face crescent-shaped. He was wearing a white suit and blue jeans.

Abdul Kadhar came in frustrated to see the sprawling Bandaranaike International Airport. 'No value is given to fellow human beings or fellow human beings who are to be valued. Selfishness and narrow-mindedness have become the culture of most politicians.

The minority races are always humiliated by the majority's oppression, by the power, by their arrogant management,' he thought to himself. He remembered the lyrics of 'The world that caught the cuckoo and put in the nest under man custody and shout to sing it. ' He also thought that 'minority races live under them as the imprisoned wife, was regrettable.'

These feelings caused Abdul Kadhar to have his skin peeling off while he was still alive and the pain of savage. A country where suspicion of the minority race has spread like wildfire. In a kind of silence in its fainting, the present is as silent as volcanoes sleeping. Only sins without atonement took place in this country. Then they were forgotten and forgotten forever. The minds of those who that wickedness has scarred will not be at peace and will burn like flames for many eras. He felt that most people did not seem to have a conscience about the horror of being an unpunished country.

The cruel, violent histories as the majority's culture rather than compassion over the crippled limbs of the minority have become the bitter horror of many today. Trapped clutches of the majority, who hate the rights of the minority, those species have retained their existence in silence and have lived a dismal life as dead bodies which have lost their souls. That is the beauty of the Buddhist majority in this country.

There was a civil war in this country. There was blood flowing in it. Human lives have no value there and hunt down hunters from both sides. Torture and murder were rampant. Human corpses rotted in the streets claiming no rights. The uncertainty that anyone, anywhere, can ever be snatched away has long ruled. It burned humanity alive. Chauvinism hid even traces of bloodshed and deliberately undermined the existence of the minority race. The Buddha's sons wore the crown of victory as a disgrace to man and shame.

In the minds of the oppressed minorities, the scars of their secondary status became permanent. Treating three children born to the same mother in various ways is felt by many after Sri Lanka's independence.

The majority race's political representatives shamelessly used racism as a political weapon. It is a characteristic of Sinhala politics. State terrorism, which seeks to unite by suppress ununitable people, continued.

The struggle of the minority race gave Abdul Kadhar severe pain. Before October in nineteen ninety, he was immersed in Tamil nationalism as a Tamil and was intoxicated. At the time, he could not believe that the LTTE was expelling Muslims from places like Chavakachcheri, Kilinochchi, and Mannar. He dismissed it as a vicious rumor aimed at undermining Tamil emancipation.

On thirty October nineteen ninety, LTTE broadcasters suddenly came to life in every corner of Jaffna. To this day, he still cannot believe the meanings of the words they uttered. The further atom bombardment of words they dropped at Osmania College permanently shattered the Tamil-speaking Muslim community.

In Jaffna, the LTTE racially introduced the rubbish hidden between Tamil-speaking Hindu and Christian people and Tamil-speaking Muslim people. Those who said we would reclaim people's land and rights with nationalism support. Snatching rights of companion race that especially Tamil-speaking Muslims and own race. In the end, the only soil that they could not retain and reclaimed by them. Due to this incident, Tamil nationalism's intoxication for Kadar dissolve. All that remains is the cultural identity dominated by being Muslim. Somebody severed the ties between Tamil nationalism and Tamil-speaking Muslims that day, and they became Non-sticky broken tiles. They continue to be unconnected rails road as two minority races. The decline of both two minorities in Sri Lanka has peaked since that day.

LTTE movement's this act was worse than the Nazis who drove the Poles out of their own homes during World War II... and settled the Germans there. This historical fact is still not understood by many today. This incident against the fraternal race buried humanity in Jaffna. The suspicious species became venomous species. Eelam Tamil remained silent with selfishness and alone.

Muslim people were expelled with fifty rupees and left as refugees. That race blindly believed in a movement as freedom fighters that plundered Muslim people's property. The benefits of its sin have seen today. The race that cut their necks today is understandable.

Abdul Kadhar's journey, which started with fifty rupees, first landed in Puttalam. It could not stay there, and it found permanence amid many tribulations in Kattankudy. It was there that Abdul Kadhar learned that they had to arm themselves with the majority race to save their race.

On the third of July the nineteen nineties, the Tigers staged anarchy in Kattankudy, killing one hundred and forty-seven brothers. It reaffirmed their claim that they were not militants but terrorists. Kadhar thinks that they have weakened the Tamils' real struggle by branding themselves as terrorists. It is still not understood by the Eelam-Tamils today that it is the curse of that race. That is what keeps the world ignoring the legitimacy of their rights. Those who tell these truths still give the title of traitors today.

A situation arose in which they had to defend themselves from those who fought for the fraternal race. Then there was the compulsion to arm oneself with the common enemy. After fifty rupees of experience, it seemed that Abdul Kadhar had unwavering justification for lifting weapons against LTTE.

The attack on the Twin Towers of the United States took place on September eleven, twenty zero one. Abdul Kadhar's mind was on change little by little as hard stone. He was not the first to accept that it was right. He could not bear the oppression and humiliation of the Muslim people everywhere as punishment for that. It brought him the lead in the boiling furnace and gave him the pain of pouring that into the heart. That is what created the frenzy to fight this oppression. He filled his mind with the urge to do whatever he could to help as much as he could. As a result, the sinfulness analysis left him saying that he did not have a job here.

The extinction of chauvinist Sinhalese and chauvinist Tamils will no longer produce turmoil in his mind. To that point, he solidly transformed himself. Time has cut off the tender feelings and ridden the ferocity on him.

The computer age loses communication distance and brings the remote person closer and closer. The exchange of information between Kattankudy and Karachi has shrunk by milliseconds. The infiltrate news on one side is coming out on the other side the next moment. He did not like to think constantly and stands outside the airport. He wondered for a moment what would happen if he bought a ticket and went inside the arrival hall. It seemed to him if he went inside, he could be freed from the gusts of wind, the roar of vehicles, and the thunder of human habitation, even after the twilight of the sun had set. It seemed to him that the machine's eyes hanging in every corner of the airport were shooting itself at many angles that prevented it. He put an end to that thought as well.

Abdul Kadhar firmly believed that standing in front of the airport and flashing too much was like betraying oneself. That's why he looked at the schedule and confirmed; departed for the airport. Something must be wrong, though. Nothing happened according to plan. He thought he could go back and talk to Haniba in the van. Then he temporarily avoided it, hoping that it would catch the eye of the spy police.

Kadhar took a picture of them from his pocket and watched that. Upon landing at the Sri Lankan airport, he will call Kadhar cell phone. About that, he wrote in a separate encrypted email already. Sahil was only in touch with Kadhar. Kadhar speculates that he may be the pilot behind it. Kadhar is a Muslim and offered to help as little that he can. He considered that their state spy agency or some other powerful organization made the rest of the matter. He thought that an individual could not possess such a fantastic technology.

In the aftermath of this event, Kadhar felt that he would turn world politics upside down. 'He is from Karachi and has not called yet. If he called on the phone and told me why he is late, I can be quiet with peace.' Kadhar Thought. He did not do that, which gave Abdul Kadhar the leg-block when he was walking on coals.

He was well aware that the particular flight was coming from Karachi and that it would land at Bandaranaike International Airport on time. So Abdul Kadhar learned that the plane had arrived on time. If so, he now understood that the flight landing schedule did survive. He just couldn't understand why Sahil and his partner hadn't come out yet even though the plane had arrived. It was not so late when the four of them met last time. They have been out for a while. It is a sacred service performed with the dedication of desires. The work that Allah does for Him only if He wills. Should concentrate man's whole focus in his career only on duty. Kadhar wondered, would there be any business for such men to waste time at the airport? Is it possible to emphasize something like that?

Abdul Kadhar has credited with keeping an eye on those who came and went for the first time. Haniba came to know that those who have sent to Puttalam were also doing their work very well. That is the first step. To Kathankudy was the second and final stage. Kadhar implored Allah that this, too, should be done well by the grace of Allah.

They smuggled spare parts from the deep sea and sent a portion to Puttalam. Kadhar had to make arrangements for that. Those in Kattankudy built the small plane in a few days. It continued to be a nightmare. It is a great test that no one should leak so much information. Diminished the security forces' attention after the civil war ended. However, it's fear that will not eradicate the Sinhala army's presence. That run and escape give the horror of walking on the knife.

Kadhar understood their smuggling work. None of these methods are new here in Sri Lanka. These methods have already taken place on a massive scale in Sri Lanka's history.

It was vast enough to give an armed force equal to a country. They are now doing this in return. They will do something that the Tigers do not even think of doing. This method is going to be an event that will permanently record in world history. That memory gave Abdul Kadhar a kind of intoxicating tremor. Kadhar was able to guess what they were going to do even though they did not fully say what they were going to do. They had the technology to do that.

The most incredible peace available to man is timely information. Kadhar is very sure about this. It drives him crazy when he reacts. It robs you of peace and chases you away in the chaos. Kadhar now experienced that cruelty. The cell phone rang just as he was going crazy.

Sahil is known to be a smoker. Kadhar could not understand why he was standing in a dangerous place and trying to buy it. For Kadhar, it put a slight strain on him. He was indignant that he was a fool who did not understand that even small mistakes could rewrite long histories.

When confirmed that Sahil and Saleem were coming, Kadhar called Haniba on his cell phone. Sahil and Saleem get out of the arrival hall; the two vehicles arrive and stop at the airport pick-up places.

'Assalamu alaykum' said Kadhar. He did not wait for an answer, opened the vehicle's back door, and placed him in a seat in a rush. He quickly went and climbed into the seat next to the driver. The vehicle departed. It overtook the airport and flew like Arjuna's arrow towards his target.

Haniba also picked up Saleem in his vehicle and left soon after. After this, Haniba realized that he could only talk to Kadhar when he returned to the airport. Anxiety about what would happen in the run-up to the reunion began to erode him.

Sahil appeared to be of light skin color complexion and tall. He was indifferent to the appearance of the North Indians. He had no fear, no anxiety, no trembling. Instead, a gentle smile always crept across his petals, unbroken. Kadhar thought it was enough for the women to see his eyes. Kadhar ignored his awkwardness to the commitment he would make to Allah.

Sahil smiled outside but boiled inside. Kadhar could not understand it. Sahil is worried that he will not share his worries with anyone. The information was given to him by a Pakistani intelligence officer. The officer was a staunch Muslim extremist. He also knew that many would end up in prison for a lifetime if that information were erroneous. According to the report, anti-aircraft weapons at nuclear power plants had disconnect due to a technical glitch in connection with the control room and some unexpected delays in the arrival of new weapons. Some intelligence reported that the nuclear power plant was with an empty hand like Ravana, who had lost his bow, standing unprotected in front of Rama. He also understood that attacking now is an opportunity. He never told it to anyone. When asked about the anti-aircraft, he assured the officer that he would take care of it. His lips smiled, but he simmered in the weight of that worry in his mind. Anti-aircraft weapons are a minor issue. It may change immediately. The indifference of the Indian authorities put it off. It sounded to Sahil. 'Insha Allah,' he thought.

1.3 Kattankudy

Between the fish singing city and Arayambathi, Intermittently unique Kattankudy stood alone. Sahil slept peacefully for half the night and half the day in a house hidden in the coconut grove. At eleven o'clock in the morning, Kadhar took Sahil to a grassy bamboo hut on the beach. Rakin and Ramis waited for him there. They checked and repaired the plane again and again. Their involvement in many debates in the Urdu language was somewhat less understandable to Kadhar.

This attack is something that can only test once. With that one try, somebody will determine success or failure; whether history written or not will be public in a few hours.

A specially made boat is ready to carry this aircraft. The plane has a schedule to travel by sea overnight. Kadhar learned that such an arrangement would apply to the flight to Puttalam. The attack must take place at the same time as told it. Even if it delays a few moments, it will ruin the whole thing. Technology, modern tools, and programs to prevent such mistakes have been collected from many places and are now ready. Only the tremors of the Indian air force give him a bad feeling. Sahil did not elaborate on his answer to that.

Despite using many tactics to fly without showing the plane on the radar, they understood that it would not provide one hundred percent protection. So they abandoned the plan of flying towards the destination from Kattankudy or Puttalam. Many things that would have passed like that would have been as easy as injecting bananas. They understood that involved a significant risk in that strategy.

Instead, the plane has scheduled to take off by sea near the destination and fly from there. They know that there will be many dangers during transportation in this way. However, they had no choice. This schedule will not allow the Indian Air Force to launch an attack before it is ready. These are all computational-based projects. The procedure is never computational, and It can bring unexpected problems at unexpected times. They also planned what to do in such cases.

Destruction, murder is justified when injustice goes over justice. Conscience is going to freeze. That tramples frozen conscience; the demand for revenge is on the rise. The rigid conscience erased the worries of injustice in what Sahil was about to do. If only destruction and injustice open the ears to hear justice. He does not seem to have any fault in using it. He now does not want to argue whether these judgments will be unjustly cursed or glorified by future generations. It is like the water left in a vessel. He did not care about the destruction of Islam's greatest adversary on the Indian subcontinent. If the Mughals had fully completed their work, India would be a Muslim country today. It seemed to him that this condition would not have come to them.

The compulsion to embark on a journey at her mercy as she loses the Bay of Bengal waves and sinks into peace.

The Palk Strait is generally quiet. It is less likely to give birth to large waves. A trip across the Bay of Bengal is a multi-day trek. It meticulously plans. Accordingly, equipment, food, etc., were packed correctly and loaded onto the boat. After loading the plane, Hid it from view outside. The cover carefully tests repeatedly to make sure it was not naked by air under any circumstances. They tightened the loose rope again.

Two days later, their journey began when Bengal fell asleep peacefully. Kadhar and Haniba left for Colombo International Airport on the Twentieth to fly to a Middle Eastern country to start their new work. After working in the Middle East for some time, they planned to move to a European country.

1.4 Attack

Three days of an uninterrupted relationship with horror is a celebration of horror in the mouse and cat game that happens for good and evil. That is an excellent consequence for Sahil. No one awoke to suspicion the boat had arrived at the beach near the mosque near its destination at one o'clock in the early morning on the twenty-third. 'Insha Allah' that event made everyone rejoice. Those who thanked the Lord began to look further into their work. Those who left Puttalam a day later also reached their destination without hindrance.

They had already contacted two others to unload the plane headed for the boat from the adjacent shore to float seaplane in the sea. They plan to leave in a hurry after unloaded the plane, but not Sahil.

Made arrangements for them to travel to a Middle Eastern country via the Chennai airport. Similarly, Thiruvananthapuram also is well-organized for others. The seaplane schedules to strike at five-thirty a.m.

It meticulously plans that none of this would go wrong and that both planes would simultaneously attack. They unloaded the plane at sea without much difficulty with its occupants' help. They had the facilities and tools for that. Then tested the machines to see if they worked.

Rakhine and Rameez then explained to Sahil what to do first before flying the plane. Finally saying goodbye to Sahil, they left with the visitors and headed towards the mosque. Sahil waited for the time to come on that lightless seaplane. He remembered the religious school he attended as a child. He believed that Allah would wait for a place in Paradise. The Swat Valley and its memories haunted him. He thought that Allah had opened the doors of a more beautiful paradise. 'Insha Allah,' he said again and again.

Sahil was stunned by the illusion that the times had been standstill for long. He prayed to God that everything would take place on time. He firmly believed that only two would kill in this holy war. Others will board the plane and leave this country. He then felt that the Indian government could not quickly punish them. Then such survivors will eventually reach their homeland somehow. He was so proud that they would celebrate the Holy War's victory there. His lips muttered a Hindi song, Holy War and the Lord's Paradise filled his brain. He was waiting for the call of Allah.

Call time came. Sahil operated the plane at precisely five-thirty. The 'Gulf air' aircraft was allowed to fly from the Chennai Airport observation tower. It pushed back onto the runway and flew into the sky. The giant bird flew towards the desert with a roar in the sky, remembering 'I escaped.'

Sahil's plane sped across the sea parallel to the mosque. It began to leap into the sky across Mosque Street. Sahil observed and held it high enough to fly without touching the seawater. Following the Sahil flight, flew parallel to the Karumari Amman Temple and the DAE Hospital. Sahil knows that he is forcing the last moments of his life to end. He counted it outstanding and dismissed the worries. Continually quietly propelled the plane towards the destination.

His beliefs like Himalayas height; that the door to heavenly life is open at the end of this life. Sahil's plane flew over the Kamatchi Amman temple. The latest state-of-the-art GPS 'Blue' fitted to the aircraft to track the Sahil aircraft's whereabouts. Predicted with the companion of GPS, Sahil's only goal was to get the plane to its destination before anyone could observe and look with suspicion.

There was a commotion at the Chennai Air Observation Tower. There was a stir as two suspicious points appeared. There was a little confusion in Thiruvananthapuram too. They could not confirm what it was; they squandered precious time drops on the phone. The Indian Air Force also investigated the mystery.

Meanwhile, the warplanes were ready to take off towards the target. When Narayanan temple approached, Sahil directed the plane towards the sea against the temple. He then turned it over and began to propel it towards the nuclear power plant at high speed.

When Sahil's friends first told him about the plan, he could not believe it at all. He had some knowledge of the whole wall of the nuclear power plant. He was speechless when they tested the possibility of a big-scale cataclysm with the «VNS41 AL-41» aircraft and the new bomb. He was at first amazed at how the knowledge, which was not even available to some superpowers' intelligence agencies, came into individuals' hands. He later learned that they had obtained it with the secret blessing of those in his country's intelligence service.

Such explosives could find in an individual's hands that amazed him that day. The shocking truth is that not everyone in the intelligence community is trustworthy. He also understood that what we do today against India can be done against Pakistan tomorrow. He did not care much about the origin of the technology in the excitement of what he would do. He became immensely famous for his opportunity to use this technology for holy war. He decided that if only some destruction could open-world eyes, they would inevitably use it. He prayed to Allah to protect the world's Muslims from such destruction.

Sahil took the speed of the plane to the peak. His target position towards the nucleus of the nuclear power plant. He prayed to Allah again and again. His mouth constantly repeated over and over, 'Allahu Akbar.'

Chennai Airport and another military aircraft observation station had concluded that the flying point was a plane. They immediately sent information to the Indian Air Force. India's modern warplanes flew towards the target the next moment. The fact that they do not have the technology to travel at the speed of light has made endless long moments for those in the aircraft observation deck.

Sahil and Saleem collided head-on with their planes, shouting 'Allahu Akbar.' Their Paradise went dark in a few seconds. The mystery dots on the control room screens disappeared forever. Those who saw it were stunned. Moments later, the planes that went to the attack told a message on their radio that they should not speak to humanity.

1.5 Nuclear War

Following the attack on the nuclear power plant reactors, India's Central Government arranged a lightning speed meeting. Visionary thinking ignores by that Hindu extremist nationalist party that runs emotional politics. Its members boiled as boiling nuclear reactor get to implement the principle of an eye for an eye. Fear that the party would do the same to freeze the world. The superpowers stun the time had come for what Gorbachev and Reagan had agreed to fear what might happen in the world.

The Indian intelligence agencies CBI and RAW got some information. They hurriedly argued at their headquarters. According to the information available to them, it is clear that the attack was initially prepared and launched from Sri Lanka. It is also clear that the attack perpetrators were Pakistanis and aids by some extremist Muslims in Sri Lanka and India. It also explained where and how the attack took place. They were fully involved in gathering and investigating further information. They urgently sent their first joint statement containing this information to the Central Government.

Following the nuclear power plant attack in Tamil Nadu, a riot erupted like wildfires between Hindus and Muslims. If Hindu extremist insurgents found Muslims' identity in any man or property, they attacked and destroyed them. In some places, men were half-naked and identified when suspicion fell on men. Then they shot and killed them if they were Muslims. They burned them. Siva, who dances where funeral pyres are lighted and coating the ashes on his body from burning the dead body, was given an extension of burning more places to the deceased. They hoped it would give them a Kailash stay.

The federal government announced a nationwide curfew, whether it wanted to stop the riot or not. They killed many Muslims, and their property was set on fire even while the curfew was in effect. Hindu thugs had lists of houses in which Muslims lived. Cell phones have capacity like big Computers, which helped to coordinate everything straightforward. Some Hindu officials helped with the gang. The details of the Muslims were made into lists and sent against humanity. With that, the Hindu thugs launched an unprovoked and aggressive attack on the Muslims. Those who were supposed to uphold the law settled their Hindu fanaticism by launching attacks in some places. Hanuman put fire in Sri Lanka old time now that came across the Palk Strait and burned the Rama's country.

The federal government continued to investigate the situation in the country overnight. Countries like Russia, the United States, and Japan have sent their special forces to India to control radiation. Special political representatives from Russia, China, and the United States came to India. Meanwhile, several Prime Ministers and Presidents have been in direct video contact with India's prime minister. Those involved made a plea to India's prime minister not to come to any extreme conclusion. If India jumps into war now, the world will jump into action.

No one can stop the wind from blowing radiation anywhere in the world. Even if a man restrains himself, he cannot prevent today's natural destiny and forever with the freedom created by the wind.

The fear that the world economy would stagnate if India's economic wheel did not move was contagious. Wherever any wheel stops after globalization, the whole world is affected by its movement. When a stock market stumbles, its impact spreads ubiquitously.

If Reagan and Thatcher had understood that their economic wheels would slip, they would only have eaten dinner and finished their work. Now Europe and the United States have to tremble at India's revolution. Like his forehead split in two, the Indian Prime Minister pulled the saffron into his middle forehead. He appeared bright in a white Sherwani. His bald head glistened with oil as the oil exploded from his skin. He propped one hand on his jaw and added the strength of his hands to bear the burden of the brain. The forehead wrinkle was more profound because of his thinking. The Prime Minister of India knows the consequences of every decision they make. His problem was to protect his political career and prevent the country's destruction. Many party members called for Pakistan to eliminate them from the world map.

The Hindu Nationalist Party has the most significant number of such extremists. If they cannot be satisfied, then the party's very existence is in question. Then, the Prime Minister's seat will disappear. He was confused about dealing with them and saving the country and their political life. Afterward, the Prime Minister held several hours of discussions with the ministers.

In that discussion, they concluded that Sri Lanka and the Maldives could not identify the forces that posed a threat to India's security. The government of that Hindu nationalist party was already hostile to its neighbors. Concerns have raised that Buddhism and Islam will be pulling leg unexpectedly. That, too, made Sri Lanka's eel nature boil them even more. The question arose as to what the Indian government would do about this.

They suggested that more troops and resources would be needed to sustain the country if Sri Lanka invaded. It also stated that they would have to earn the world's fierce opposition. They abandoned the plan to invade Sri Lanka. The Government of India then decided to send two lakh troops and the necessary weapons to Sri Lanka to strengthen security. Although it understood that many countries would strongly oppose this decision, they decided that there was no other way to enhance their security.

Although they were worried about what China would say, they did not want to back down from their plan. India predicted that China would not want a war between India and China and that the whole country would be affected by the resulting radiation.

When India informed the Sri Lankan government of this decision, they vehemently opposed it. This reaction is what India was expecting. Sri Lanka argued that no one could relinquish their autonomy. They argued that they had an army that had won victories in a very efficient war and that they would deal with this problem correctly. They said their army would ensure the security of their country. Those arguments did not work for India; they fled to China. China sought to protect itself and its resources first. China does not want to contradict the current state of instability. It was well aware that it did not sacrifice sharks to catch shrimp. It does not want to help Sri Lanka and get caught up in a nuclear war. China advised Sri Lanka to accept India's current military presence. When the problem eased a bit, they vowed to talk with India and the United Nations about it and came to a positive conclusion.

Sri Lanka allows India to enter their territory for the third time. India entered Sri Lanka for the second time in defiance of Sri Lanka's autonomy. The Sri Lankan government, for its part, has for some time frozen relations between the two states. Sri Lanka complained to the UN that India had violated its autonomy. All the superpowers in the UN were unusually quiet. No one considers the fact that ants sacrifice in the elephant's path. Many nations froze in horror at what would happen in the world next. Sri Lanka's problem does not seem to them an end in itself.

Terrorists hated by many people have started a war. The extremists elected by the people were ready to blow it up. Indian scientists will never approve of nuclear war. Until the power was out of their hands, their ideas became a Conch inflated in deafness.

Indian opposition parties have called the failure to retaliate to destroy the reactor's cowardice and a victory for terrorists and their allies. Like this is how the Indian government predicted the opposition party's campaign. The Hindu National Party explored what it could gain from this political gamble. The reality is that it will ruin the future of his party. If nothing does, if a nuclear war breaks out, it may go out of control. Then, there is the danger of completely wiping out Southeast Asian nations. This fact frightened the Prime Minister like height over that Himalayas top. It devoured the Prime Minister's peace of mind. The Prime Minister was well aware that the blame would remain if the nuclear war lost control. The detonation of an atomic bomb will inevitably lead to a period of contempt and vain reproach from the world. He does not like to imagine what it will be like when the series does not stop there.

India, currently suffering from two radiation leaks, will be even more affected by the war. In many cities, people will become uninhabitable. Millions of people will be extinct in a few moments. The Indian economy is in a slump. Millions of people; Radiation, and its contagious diseases can be affected. It will press on his grip for a long time. Many such facts plagued Prime Minister relentlessly.

Nagasaki and Hiroshima still bear the brunt of the world's use of atomic bombs. Instead, the tsunami has introduced Fukushima. This distraction is a message that will forever remember by humanity. Its impact passes on through human DNA units to the next generation. His mind was embarrassed to repeat that history in India called Gandhi's earth.

If the counter-attack does not carry out, the terrorists and the countries that support them will attack India more and more. History will write that India fears terrorism. Our country can never accommodate that. Indian history should not be subservient to any terrorists. India's prime minister concluded and knew that would overthrow the government overnight if the people did not see the retaliation.

He first decided to punish Pakistan for supporting terrorists. There was confusion as to how to punish it. They immediately refuted the talk of an embargo. It does agree that this major attack would not match its impact and that China would repel it.

Although the appropriate punishment was a military strike, the opinion was that it should not be a nuclear weapon. India's prime minister was keen not to discredit that India was the first to use nuclear weapons. It is easy to come to power based on religion, race, caste, and humans' fear. After coming to such a position, he realized that it was dangerous to ride on power horseback without being accused of violating law and humanity.

Finally, a decision takes in the cabinet. Accordingly, Pakistan must arrest and extradite to India all those on the name list provided by the Indian spy agency within twenty-four hours. It announced that India would launch a conventional attack on Pakistan to destroy the terrorist centers if it fails. Explicitly stated that Pakistan was responsible for any consequences. India insisted that it could not stop the bloodshed if it dragged out Pakistan this time as it dragged out in the past.

The Indian Prime Minister, who sent the announcement to Pakistan, ordered the armed force commanders to move their troops towards the border. He also ordered that all weapons, including nuclear weapons and their forces, be kept at the highest alert level.

The Pakistani government was shocked by India's statement. It boiled down to the injustice of claiming responsibility for any terrorist act in India. Pakistan is baffled that it does not know what kind of terrorism involves hatred to guarantee its internal security. They were outraged by what India was doing as Pakistan suffered from controlling domestic terrorism at home.

The number of countries running after India's tail has increased in the wake of economic growth. Even China may change its politics sometime soon. Philosophy is all about being beautifully spoken. No one hesitates to put the faded red shirts in the old storage box if there is some economic advantage. Pakistan has now changed its mindset that believing in a country with a beautiful dictatorship for administrative convenience and capitalism for economic progress is like stepping on two boats.

As soon as India's announcement makes, several Pakistani political parties started protesting. However, Pakistan tried to arrest the terrorists with the available list. Opposition parties have vehemently opposed the arrests, handed them over to India, and started a big demonstration. The protests turned into a riot. The police and army began to pay close attention to their repression. During that time, the Pakistani government's arrest period ended abruptly. Only two people on the list were arrested and jailed at the time. They reported the details to the Government of India.

The Prime Minister of India was furious. 'Each time, Pakistan will make us foolish.' This act is not a one-time story but continuing without one end. 'They are not going to change. The horror of wreaking havoc on the part of India is over. Even so, India is waiting patiently. But the Pakistanis could not feel responsible.' He shouted, raised his hands in disgust, and stabbed at the table. Those who were there looked at him with pity. Sweat dissolved the saffron on the forehead, and like blood flowed on the table.

The Indian prime minister summoned the Army, Air Force, Navy commanders and approved the attack. News that India had approved the attack reached the Pakistani spy agency in a moment. The Pakistani government was a little embarrassed to learn of it. It then decided that if India waged war on Pakistan, it would be a holy war and could use any weapon. The Prime Minister of Pakistan ordered his Army, Air Force, Navy commanders to prepare all three forces and nuclear weapons.

On the morning of the twenty-sixth of January, two thousand twenty-six Indian warplanes crossed Pakistan's border. Pakistani planes fought against it. Indian missiles also hit Pakistani targets. Pakistan mistakenly mistook an Indian conventional missile for a nuclear-capable missile and aimed its nuclear-armed missiles in India with its heads. India was shocked initially but immediately managed to launch its nuclear missiles at Pakistan with large packages. All this could have happened in a matter of seconds, long before prepared the world to negotiate peace. The world that watched the event was stunned. It was a silent witness to the disaster that occurred in both countries. No one can stop humanity from being destroyed by meager humans once again. The United States, the world's guardian, froze in shock. They even give the opportunity here to express their opinion.

Maha Bharat said that the Panchapandava appeared to reduce the world's burden on that day. Today, the divided Panchpandavas earth fought with nuclear weapons and reduced the world's responsibility. The atomic weapon they made on earth instead of the Panchpandavas served God Krishna today.

1.6 Recession

War-torn India, Pakistan, and their neighbors were subject to massive radiation. As a result, people living in those countries were subject to the dead and various forms of illness and abuse. The radiation killed not only humans but also animals and plants. The rest of the humans felt incurable diseases. The rest animal also became ill. The number of people who can work because of illness is low. Areas affected by radiation were set aside by the government as unsuitable for agriculture. As a result, arable land is shrinking more than ever. The rest of the men were starving. Cannibalism becomes the only choice for the rest of the living human. But that's a twenty to forty percent vegetarian eating Hindu earth. Whether or not to end human life was brought to the forefront of living human beings.

Following the Indo-Pakistani war, the world began to swallow up the Great Depression. It robbed millions of people of their jobs. Unemployment and hunger were rampant around the globe. Its impact has hit the most impoverished countries hardest. At the same time, those problems did not leave the European countries. Residents of India, Pakistan, and the surrounding nations began to invade Europe without eating their fellow human beings. They hoped to have a good life there.

Those who were luxurious with extreme comforts could not bear to see their comfort diminished or go out of work. Europeans who were already disgusted that colored immigrants were to blame for the overall problem did not like more immigrants coming from Asia. That and the influx of refugees from some Muslim countries made them very disgusted. Many native people believed that the Muslims who came would uproot their religion, resort to violence, have more children, multiply their race, and make the native minority. Some of the second generations of Muslims became human bombs and terrorists. The history of the explosion in places like Africa, Asia, America, and Europe further frightened them. Aware of this, the far-right began to cover up their terrorism, inflate fear of Muslims, and seize power in any country in Europe. They propagated that these colored immigrants were to blame for all the suffering. The far-right pointed out that the only solution was to expel these colored immigrants from their rich countries. People who experienced the economic downturn also began to believe it easily

Little did the people know that better politicians were found than the far right to drive these colored immigrants out of Europe. Their support began to turn to those far-rights. Those far-rights know that they hold anti-human acts and provoke their emotions to hold on to politics. Knowingly, they felt that it was not necessary to give much priority to human beings before position and power.

They also commented that parasites were ravaging their country in humanity's name. They claimed for themselves the fact that the empire builds on human corpses.

The whole world fills with historical facts that ruled for many years with the support of that country's people by leaders who violated human rights. It has become the argument that politicians must fulfill what the people want rather than whether other human beings are respected. People keep such politicians in office. Even more heroic are those who, when they become the majority government, change the laws in their favor, water down the opposition, unleash repression on the thinkers, and end up as permanent dictators. The countries of these people of color have been an excellent example of that. The far-right came with dreams of surpassing Hitler's crown. Telling that fact did not shake their existence initially, and they were cautious and patient. Simultaneously, the people became increasingly disgusted by the slanderous propaganda about the colored immigrants. The Far-right took responsibility for their votes.

Indian Hindu extremist politicians and Pakistani politicians were doomed to destroy their people and their own country's downfall. Some of the rest sought refuge in Europe, where ultra-white politicians planned to kill them as colored immigrants.

India and Pakistan were shocked by the tragedy. Their faces frowned as Hitler's vision about Aryan origin fell back on their homeland. Over time, it became clear that they, too, had taken the form of Hitler in the pursuit of power and religious fanaticism. That atrocity drove their people towards Europe. The old philosophy of Hitler's dusted off is that they don't even need food for those who don't need to keep alive. When understood, India and the countries around it trembled with fear.

Those who have played foreign politics with neighboring countries for a long time did not understand that they would fall victim to that game one day. When it suddenly became a reality, Gandhi's teaching came back to the Gandhian nation. After the tsunami of destruction as a lesson of the times, no philosophy gave them a hand.

2.1 Norway

On Wednesday, the twenty-fourth of March, two thousand twenty-seven, at fifteen o'clock, three white cars entered a series of shopping malls in the center of the Norwegian city of Oslo called the 'Oslo City.' One of them was driven by an African with red curly hair. He dresses as a Muslim with a white overcoat and a traditional white cap. Competing with the height of the camel is his head gently banged into the trunk of the car. He is from Somalia. A fat Arab drove the other vehicle. His hair's aggression was dense with the invasion that took place there, destroying his face's identity. He wore a white stretch coat and wore a jacket over it for the cold, a tight embrace of the ruthless rudeness on his face. If the world not be conquered by Islam, he insists on destroying the world forever. A skinny Afghan drove the final car. His was of good height, his face was shaved and gleamed, but the grief flowed into it. His eyes widened in anger that he would destroy this world without the single rule of Allah. He dresses like a European.

'Oslo city' was so crowded that sesame seeds would not fall to the ground if they threw into the river of people. Inside is a wave of people rushing in and making last-minute purchases in a hurry as the holiday for Big Friday begins tomorrow. It hit the lock with no place to move. Like men standing and dancing on a volcano that readies to erupt, the mothers were active in the motionless movement in which the social tensions disappeared. It is a time when rival violence is rampant.

The curse of the human race is the demigods, the leaders who have lost sight of religion and still live the Stone Age life today, and their rulers do not understand their fellow men and their lives and rights. For the sake of the position, the false scriptures are recited and worshiped as devilish demons for religion. It has become an old scripture to hit one cheek and give the other cheek. Kill! It has become a new scripture that the 'Gates of Motsam' will be open to you if you kill.

They believe that many people fall victim to this, destroy themselves and drag others into it as insects go towards the lamp.

Humans have been devastated by the effects of radiation in Asia. The sorrows and distortions that quickly gripped the weakened human drove them anywhere. It made human misery cheap. Immigration in Europe has been hated like poison by the many natives for many decades. Although hated by the natives, they could not fully control it in practical life. Obstacles to that stand in the way of world trade, UN laws, the old name of philanthropy, the Ten Commandments, and the rest of humanity. Countries like Greece and Italy have now forgotten that humanitarian concession. Instead, they try to prevent refugees come into the country and being bullied and barricaded. Trying to do so did not pay off. Refugees who violate it are left in the middle of the street without any basic facilities. One day they will get the food that the church gives. The next day it is a nightmare. Sad on the one hand and starving on the other, they lived on the streets like rabies dogs and were beaten by the perpetrators.

When those who came with dreams about European life were left to beg, they were heartbroken. As a story about wanting to catch some fly away, you give up what you permanently have is not a good decision. Those who lived with the family in their own house were homeless, and they have to live with the family under the open sky as Orphans. It has resurfaced today in some European cities like the past to prevent the inconvenience of looking back at history. Instead of the old verse of work and reach freedom, the new poem of liberation without help is an unwritten practice.

To say goodbye to the parks' floral scent, the smell of corpses wafted slowly. This tragedy has become a reality for many refugees in affluent Western Europe. Unbuilt tombs and graves without graves stone proliferated.

The influx of refugees did not stop with Greece but began to occupy Europe. Although man is a social animal, he is the first to add resources to his family. He is wild when that selfishness is affected.

Its boundaries are always movable. When it comes to distributing resources, the animal's qualities stand out, and humanity pulls into the shell-like a snail. That time Darwin's theory will come to life. That's always an unchangeable truth.

Although European and global resources and technology are enough to share the whole world they possess, they do not want their share to be weakened or depleted. Europe was once again preparing to pass on Darwin's theory to the refugees and expanding borders. In the gigantic growing organization of the European Union, the moderates have a sideline, and it has become a puppet of the far-right nationalists. This horror greatly suffocated thinkers. The thought and reality shook them that this change would teach the world something new. Conscientious men wandered restlessly. They torment by the idea of the coming world history.

Historians change places of residence over time. They know the situation; those countries also began to work hard to iron out their immigration laws. European governments began to talk vociferously about controlling wide borders.

The atrocities currently taking place have caused untold suffering to immigrants who have already lived in Europe for a long time. They collected as much food, clothing, and tents as possible and worked to provide for refugees currently arriving in Europe. Many governments dragged down that too, with their administrative units prevented, denied humanity because the aid would encourage refugees' arrival.

Some of the immigrants who lived as the second generation became serious extremists. They were shocked to see this atrocity. Some clergymen who knew the pulse approached them in many countries. They brainwashed them into boiling with rage. They load with religious intoxicants. They distorted the beautiful teachings of Islam and taught that violence is justified. They sent them to attack civilians. Although not everyone agrees with this type of brainwashing, some have fallen victim to it.

It increased the number of human bombs that already existed. Islamic extremism, other religious extremism, and right-wing extremism blindly danced like demons to kill humanity.

The first generation of immigrants had less ability to enter and exit the country's alleys in which they lived. They lacked the energy to get everything they needed. Some of them have been outcasts. Such a thing would not be a challenge to the first generation of immigrants' heirs. If they want to do something against that country or the people of that country, they will easily do it. They needed accessible places where people could gather rather than pursue larger security targets to carry out such an attack. The trade center called 'Oslo City' is very suitable for that. Terrorism is an eyeless maniac. Where it flows, who it flows on, what it flows on, when it flows. All are confusing. Its flow is only sure to wreak havoc. It does not care about anything, even care about ruining one's relationships. They will not even show mercy on how many innocent own religious children in this crowd are floating in dreams of the future.

The vehicle occupants parked them side by side in the parking lot on the down floor. Then they did something in a hurry. They hid from observation without recording what they were doing on camera. Then they hurried upstairs and left the building. Those who came out were happy to have reached the Paradise of Allah. They boarded a car waiting for them and headed for Sweden.

One hour after their departure, the quake shook the center of Oslo. Although many initially speculated it must have been an earthquake, the aftermath denied it because of loud bomb explosion noise. That vibration suffocated the city itself. It violated a bomb planted by the far-right twenty-second day of July in the year two thousand and eleven to undermine Norwegian democracy against the Labor government. That memory immediately arose in the minds of the people. Shock upon shock struck them. Again and again, their country's attack by terrorists made them tremble, fear, hate, anger.

Norway is proud to be the only country to have enjoyed a monopoly on peace since World War II. It stretched across the North Pole as a saved paradise where tragedies such as wounds, bloodshed, and deaths would not occur in large numbers.

The immense abundance of wealth sowed the seeds of peace. The calmness that resulted from the nature of the people, confidence in democracy, respect for the law, loyalty to humanity made the courage to find an answer to anything through negotiation was overwhelming to them. Due to this, the war was far from Norway. Here are a few methods that have been discovered and destroyed in the planning stages of a terrorist attack. The peace of this earth not soaked in blood was killed by the far right on the twenty-second of July in the year two thousand and eleven. That was a tragedy for Norway. The incredible suffering of being attacked at home when there was a fear that the Islamists would attack. The turmoil, the anxiety, and similarity occur when the truth tells. Norwegians rallied against violence as a whole nation. Those scenes will always be on our minds. Piles of roses present in every corner of the country. The world is amazed by the sentence 'If a man can show so much hatred, think how much love we can all show together.' Times have changed, and his face has changed. They told the tiger to come, the tiger is coming, but now the tiger has arrived.

The subsequent hunt for Islamic extremists did not spare Norway, which borders the North Pole. It is one new history. Norway bought some disputes in a peace mission. Norway did not wage war on any individual nation or race, but Norway earns some unnecessary fuss by hanging after NATO and the United States. At that time, some newspapers published the wrong caricature about Muhammad, the Muslims who lived worldwide boiled about that.

The Muslims of the world boiled and were outraged at European press freedom. Some wanted to respond violently. The hunt began.

There is no general opposition to Norway. If they come, It did not last long, though. Pro-economic conditions bring more peace.

Many countries sought Norway's friendship for its oil resources and technology. Another fact is that the vast expanse of the Norwegian sea stretches across the seafront are never-ending seafood plates. Many countries have understood that fact.

The central part of Oslo becomes a battlefield again. People heard scary noises in every corner of the city. Special security forces, police, and fire brigades were involved in the rescue operation: vehicles glistening everywhere and their noisy mess. Green helicopters rushed to the scene and found someplace to land and airlifted the injured. Crowds gathered across the street as people left the buildings in shock and as did people looking for extraordinary events and news collectors. Police barred them from approaching the ruins. Rescue workers were also brought in along with sniffer dogs, massive cranes, and lorries for the rescue operation. As the night goes cold will bit the skin, and that will look not lovely. Before that, the business was in full swing. Rescuing humans alive means retrieving them within hours of the incident. Time will melt, and then hope will also melt. The life of trapped human beings is in question.

Most of the injured took in ambulances to Ullevål Hospital, Rikshospital, and a few other hospitals outside of Oslo. The others airlifts to the helicopter for emergency treatment. The bodies of the deceased place inside a tent for identification. The Norwegian people refused to believe in this disaster in Oslo. What happened again in Oslo reminded them of old scars. The crowd erupted in shock because tragedies descended like black clouds on their face, and some ran around like crazy. Many were busy recording the disaster.

Television companies provided twenty-four hours of live service in response to this tragedy. It describes as the second-largest terrorist attack in Norway. As the Twin Towers of the United States and the Taj Hotel in Mumbai, the government skyscraper was Norway's prominent landmark has already had attacks.

The terrorist did not stop there and went to the island of 'Utøya' in a policeman's guise and shot the Labor youth.

This time 'Oslo city' has become a target for terrorism. The people were shocked and outraged that the terrorists had deliberately bombed. Sad questions about the inability to detect and prevent the attack began to surface. Some people understand that race and religion are no matter to terrorism.

Hundreds of people were killed, according to many TV reporters. Not surprisingly, more people flocked there for the day. That alone has brought great destruction. It has always been the intention of terrorists to inflict high casualties. They planned to detonate the bomb at that busy time. They have succeeded in it. The repercussions of the devastation were rippling everywhere.

Hundreds of bodies were found during a multi-hour search overnight. An extreme right-wing party also ruled Norway in line with Europe's transformation. The left has long ignored the party, and the right told like foreigners have seized power in Oslo. Muslims are increasingly going to make the Norwegian people a minority. Islam will destroy our religion and culture, and so on; Norway's seized control out of fear. The hatred between races and beliefs, and the resulting terrorism, are now threatening the world like never before. It also hit Norway hard.

As soon as the party came to power, it took drastic measures to prevent foreigners from entering the country as refugees. The government altogether forbade the people to go abroad and meet the bride or groom and married there. They don't show mercy if they caught the foreigner and sent him back to their home country, even if they found a reason for something. The foreigner who was a prisoner has immediately deported.

The plan was also to expropriate a foreigner's citizenship who had no language skills. The hatred of the natives created even more problems for the foreigner in employment. The government agencies called them for interviews and then sent them back without any real consideration. Private companies have thrown their applications in the trash after seeing a foreigner's name.

Many lost their jobs. The party campaigned that the foreigner was just eating without going to any job. It further strengthened the hatred of the natives against people of color. Hatred for hatred also resulted in people of color.

When political power falls into the wrong hands, whatever political system it is, it flows harshly against those who oppose the state. No one can save those who portray as enemies of the state. This situation is history and current practice. Right-wingers and left-wingers shed dumb tears at the sight of their people and their decisions. They were heartbroken that Norway had so quickly forgotten World War II lessons. They felt guilty that they had not done enough to raise awareness of it while they were in office. The people of that country wanted and voted for Hitler to power. He ruled through democracy. When he came to power, he changed the laws. Then he subdued everyone and became a dictator. The people choose many dictators in history even now, by that dictatorship may live on for some time. Democracy can then surrender before anarchy.

Justice will win in the end, like the Mahabharata war. Democracy will succeed if it has it. Dictatorships in a long time will fail. Convinced the left and the right that the Norwegian people would change.

The Norwegian Prime Minister, who went to a European Union meeting, returned home in a hurry. The woman Prime Minister is very confident that their austerity will benefit the country. So she did not care about the bad names coming to her country. From the moment she heard the news, she could not stand in anger and boiled.

Far-right politicians like her do not formally put their political and economic policies before the people instead of honest political-economic policies. Thus they never had the confidence to win political victories honestly. Instead, they will find out who can blame the politics that is going wrong. That way makes the natives hateful, and hatred will blunt people's thinking ability. Then climb on them and ride. History has left many examples to support them.

These far-right's main task is to oppose the weak people in society, love open alcohol policy, tax relief to the rich, and give false promises that they will spend lots of money without showing income.

The following day, the Prime Minister of Norway arrived at the site of the terrorist attack. The attack and the devastation that followed left everyone distraught. It brought back old memories and plunged them into the climax of emotion. The prime minister's eyes, who was already angry with the extreme Islamists, turned red as a vampire. The chin turned from pink to blood red, and his lips twitched. Hands trembled. There is the sound of a riding horse kicking and kicking in anger when she walks. In anger, she looked here and there. Her face was deformed. She bit her teeth. She held back from the fact that the Tsar was no longer in power and wanted to clean up Islamists' destruction. She still did not forget that democracy is the tradition in this country.

The country's mother, who was speechless in the emotional turmoil, continued to tremble. Then she looked around at the devastation with a narrow face as if she had overcome herself.

She then gave an interview to reporters. In it, she promised to find the culprits and give them a severe punishment. She then correctly announced that the next three days would observe as a nationwide day of mourning. At the same time, she left for Parliament with an angry face. She was disgusted with the colored immigrants. Even more disgusting than that on Muslim people. The hatred came over the colored immigrants who were loyal puppies at her party too. All but the white race appeared wicked.

Following Norway's attack, there were heated debates in the country's Parliament. No matter how loud it is, the case without witnesses is the same as the justice lost. Democracy is the name of victory for the majority. Since the far-right had a majority, they changed the laws to their liking.

People living in Europe after World War II did a good thing. They did not have to give a majority to any party and saw that anarchy did not arise. It buried the dictatorship in the graves of Western European countries. That situation is currently changing. The far-right, which had won a majority, dared to overthrow the democracy of this country and run a dictatorial regime or maintain a puppet democracy and do what they set out to do. They got the vote in Parliament. Yet, they have not lowered the standard of democracy in Norway to that extent. Cat on the wall at its border. No one ever doubted which side they would lean on; those who knew the direction and strength of the wind sunk. The wind began to blow. It hit hard. that have got a strong reason for that. The generalization and isolation of the attack will now be at his discretion.

Some of the laws introduced in Parliament have passed, knowing that they were not in line with EU law. It made many Norwegians think about their last election results. According to the law, everyone will issue a new identity card. They announced that the system would add the country of birth and religion to the identity card. The facility identified an eye's scanning according to the identity card data. The police have given the power to arrest those without identity cards. That widely interpreted that such austerity would help reduce crime and terrorism and make it easier to apprehend terrorists.

Opposition parties have started the protest and went to the street. They called it a blatantly racist act. The demonstration of the powerless is like the cry of the afflicted. The more aggressive extent of police violence during protests now, than before with conscious when removed hundreds of protesters by truck. It gave many a shudder that the face of democracy was languishing. It dusted off the memory of many again. The ethnography of Europe has shaken many intellectuals.

2.2 Europe

Islamic extremism and the arrival of foreigners brought back the old history of Europe. It was then that India and Pakistan looked at each other in an endless big power struggle. The result was the disgrace of their face and the export of millions of people to Europe as refugees. Those countries that left people in the middle of the street after the war; focused on a different direction that would not solve their misery.

Europe was constantly flooded with colored immigrants, leaving many native people feeling like set an arrow to flow into the burn. Thus, refugees from Southeast Asia have to spend more resources than ordinary refugees to cure or maintain their radiation-related illnesses. This treatment puts even more burden and resentment on European governments. They force to build refugee camps and many new hospitals and facilities. The European countries were stunned by this extra burden. Continuing to control refugees' influx has become a significant challenge, even though they have a program to control refugees' flow and keep them in their home country. The impact of radiation in India and Pakistan on the surrounding countries prevented the refugees from staying and maintaining their homes. And Europeans were disgusted by Asians' corrupt culture, which had hands down from generation to generation. They realized that giving money could not stop the influx of refugees.

Attacks by Islamic extremists continued in EU-affiliated countries and elsewhere. What happened in the distance was brought to the backyard of Europeans today. This violence is blindfolded; disorientated; Jumped on many innocents. It exploded and scattered here and there with a bit of blink of an eye. Many Europeans began to experience a mental illness to live under terrorism. State terrorism against terrorism gave the same mental illness to some. Europe was the last to join Africa, Asia, and the Middle East.

The general rule of law is that an attack can be easily carried out and challenging to defend against it.

Europe could not escape that fate. As the terrorist attacks by extremist Muslims continued, so did the influx of refugees into Europe. Muslim extremism and immigration to the far-right, as did Hitler's communism and the Jews. They were ready to use the opportunity.

The European Union positions were gradually falling into the hands of the far-right of Europe. That facility makes it easier to set up a plan on a broader scale and implement it in member countries.

Attacks similar to those in Norway have taken place in many European countries. Because of that, Norway and some other countries have been pushing for stricter laws across the EU. Accordingly, it suggested that the EU introduce an identity card such as Norway and link it to a central information center. At first, there was strong opposition to it. Then it dried up, but the hopelessness caused many to suffer. The UK, which had left the city of London as a 'ghetto' for immigrants, was at first skeptical, and also, it is not a member of the EU who will wait to do something about it.

The new EU identity card is similar to the one used in Norway. All the information in it was collected and stored in the information center common to European countries. All European countries have access to such information. It also becomes a reality that even a little intelligent Cyber Hacker can get it. They widely believed that such information would help prevent terrorist acts of sabotage and arrest criminals. Some concealed that far-right governments had packed many more motives into the card.

Although some countries initially opposed the move, many later agreed, citing the threat posed by terrorism. Accordingly, if someone caught in any corner of the EU and his number was entered into a computer or identified his eye, they would have the facility know his biography. Minorities feared that this would somehow lead to racial oppression, although it would also help identify and control crime.

The ruling class did not take that view as a matter. History was waiting to tell them what their plan was.

3.1 Oslo

The name Oppsal comes from Oppsal farm and means the places that are located high. Observatory on the outskirts of Oslo. Oslo's central part is on the seaside, away from the suburban Oppsal center and adjoining the highlands with hills and forests. Oppsal is a small town, and It is a private world with peace. Its complete form is a miniature of a city.

Many of the areas in Oppsal have the series house. Vignesh settled in one of them. When he decided there, he could not find any foreigner there. He then lived as a lone foreigner. Vignesh's wife died suddenly of cancer some time ago. She is a tragic victim of destiny. He collapsed. The blessing he received was the only wonderful, beautiful daughter of his life. Let's explore what beauty is. Its fate of beautifying varies from person to person. She is as stunning to him like the crew click is beautiful to her mother. As the lifeblood of his life, the meaning of this world's existence when he takes her to primary school is when he comes back when the neighbors see him, they interrupt and talk to her. They will enjoy watching her. They will enjoy laughing. They will do anything for him if he needs help. Vignesh will do the same when they need help. Those relationships have boundaries as well. Coming home like a Jaffna villager comfortably from the yard, a thousand conversations are drinking a cup of tea, that relationship got a little stronger, not in a position to transform into an affectionate bond here. Friendships that could not grow with us like that, he observed that sometimes they grow within the race. Vignesh also felt that he could not develop his Tamil friends' closeness with Tamil friends. Does Vignesh often wonder if there is any truth in the poisonous word like race depends on race?

The majority of foreigners coming to Norway end up in Oslo. Their social system tends to promote it. Living alone, cutting off the bonds of brother, sister, uncle, and brother-in-law, so on. Become alien to them here. The concentration of foreigners in Oslo has increased due to the lack of own cultural entertainment in another place. So it seemed to be the invasion of people of color everywhere in Oslo to some people. It brought disgust to the far-right as the unwanted wife. They found faults and crimes in colored immigrants.

They carried out many repressions by law in the guise of ruling in their own hands. It perceives by every colored immigrant and the children born to them as a gradual command, restraint, and violence. Leftists marched against it with torchlight. Social media use as much as possible, and leaflets prints and published. Their voices were like a stone thrown into a well, refusing to affect society. There is no response from people whose minds are numb. Those people formed a community. It turned a blind eye to this injustice. When nationalism and racism narrative, thought becomes blunt, and emotion prevails. There is no shortage of individuals who turn a blind eye to social injustice, sometimes when their very existence threatens. Norway's humane society was slowly losing its character. Over time it took on a different face. It appeared distorted.

A Somali man and his family soon settled in Vignesh's townhouse area. After that, a Kurdistan family came to live there. In the days to come, the signposts for selling a house will often jam at the junction. Vignesh began to understand what this meant. The joy disappeared; he does not surprise. This pattern expects by Vignesh. The pain of the dilemma of why this change in the chest. It has become customary for the natives to leave the area where most foreigners are settling without being told any. In Sri Lanka, too, no one welcomes the arrival of the oppressed where the aristocracy is. If they come and decide beyond that, then they will stay with them with untold hate inside. He never saw them flee their location for that. Developed European countries did the opposite.

The expulsion of the natives created modern 'Ghettos' there. The left has no power, and the left now suffers no atonement for their mistake. The Ghettos alone were increasing in many countries as the Leper home. The settlements that form in hatred are a continuum from antiquity to the present day.

*

That day the daughter of Vignesh came home crying. Her name was Thiri. Vignesh came from work did not understand what happened to her. Thiri would not usually weep for anything. It is not usual for him to pick up mail now. Thiri will take it. So Vignesh did not understand why this cry was happening. Something must have happened at school, or he thought there must have been some message in the mail. He could not know what it would be. Thiri continued to cry.

Crying without telling why she was crying, hold others, and make loud lamentations should be a commodity imported here from our country. The fact that it adopts by the children growing up here made Vignesh angry and pitying her. Crying without telling the problem does not make sense. Some people find it awful to watch. There is no empathy for the weeping without knowing the reason for that. Instead, the anger came to the tip of the nose.

Vignesh's anger is unrelenting. 'Leave the crying and tell me what's going on. You are crying without saying anything like our village older women. Where did you get used to crying like this?' Vignesh's Shouted in anger. Dad's offense made the Thiri even more anxious. The fact that Dad was angry that he did not understand her injustice made her even hotter. 'Are you so angry, Dad? They have done injustice, Dad. Can't we live here with respect anymore?' Asked, and she took a paper towel, wiped her nose, and put it in the trash.

No matter how angry she is, she will put the paper in the trash bucket properly.

'Tell me what happened,' said Vignesh in a subdued voice. 'For me, To that Somali girl, To Kurdistan girl... They gave us a place near us because that is not a good school. All the other Norwegian, including Ana, Nina, had a good school place elsewhere. They planed and done this, Dad. Even if we get more marks, it is of no use. The only ones who have decided are whether we are Norwegian or not. The name always betrays who we are.' Thiri continued to cry.

He does not understand how to comfort Thiri now. Is it possible to escape from this if the Thiri has one in the name of the natives? Even so, he understood that his name, which would not leave the Tamil identity, was being pushed behind as the last name.

They are now legislating some, and many enforce in practical life as unwritten law. If Vignesh had done any other work, he would have been out of work by now. He continues to maintain it as he works in the medical field. This time is a new historical period. How to survive in this can be an unanswerable question. It has become the tradition of humanity that histories conveniently forgotten. Vignesh decided that he was not ready to go somewhere anymore for fear of the people no matter what happened.

Thiri retook a paper towel, wiped her nose, and threw it in the trash can. 'What did we can do, Thiri? No more shouting will help here. We just have to look at the way forward to see if we can get the skills we need.'

'How can we come up with talent, Daddy? How can we get better marks in a school where there are no teachers to teach? We have to study the whole thing by ourselves now. Even if we study, marks will give by them, Dad? Surely life is wasted here and there,' she said. Vignesh stood with the thinking for a while and said in disgust, 'Where else to run? How many time runs? Everything is disgusting.'

'You are exhausting with your life now. But, this is just the beginning of life for us. Why did not we go to the United States?' Said Thiri with confidence.'

We do a little compromise here, Thiri. I do not know how politics will change there. It depends on that, and we must wait and see.' Said Vignesh. 'Daddy, will there ever be a problem for us?' She asked. 'It's not a guarantee to that.

Most of them, too, are European heirs. Rather, do justice and injustice depend on who has the weapon and power on hand? Whites rule the United States as well. It is a miracle that black came to power. There is no guarantee that it will continue to happen. The white police enforce the law there in the United States.' Said Vignesh. 'Why are you scaring me so much?' Asked Thiri.

'The purpose is not to scare you. I told the history of what happened. No public justice is important to man when it comes to himself. Man is a thinking animal. Those who have power, position, and modern weapons in their hands are the ones who determine the fate of others. It was a good experience for us in our country. To be right for that man does not have to be a universal right or a fit for common moral.' 'Everything should not come like that, Dad. These native people must realize the error and repent as soon as possible. Everyone must fight for it. The shame that this has happened in other classic countries should never have come to Norway. 'That's what everyone wants. It remains to see what the people who hold the position and power will do,' Said Vignesh.

3.2 Combustion

Hate is born as a tiny dot. It then eats what is available along the way like a snowball and turns into fat. The poison of hatred of right-wing extremists began to spread rapidly in the river of people. Ordinary people started to believe that the extremist right-wing's big lies had repeatedly told were true. People who began to think so began to accept what the far right was saying about treating foreigners. Justifiably portrayed many injustices. Those who opposed it identifies as enemies and traitors. Although some natives wanted to fight against injustice, they remained silent, thinking that their identification and stamping would cause suffering not only to themselves but also to their children and relatives.

Regardless of anything, some people volunteered to fight against what happened soon.

According to their government's mood, the law's value deciding by the people. When the government views other races as secondary, a section of the population concludes that it is justified to use violence against them.

People's minds across Europe began to change as the termite eating dry leaves. From time to time, attacks on people of color began to occur here and there. The first such attacks started in Eastern Europe if attacked people of color regardless of any religion or race.

Eastern Europe's situation changed rapidly, with Islamists' identities being attacked or humiliated wherever they saw them. Even when some Muslim youths threw away their identities that they did not want to, the color of their skin betrayed them. Eastern Europe's events brought more anxiety and fear to the colored immigrants who lived in Western Europe. They wondered how their lives would turn out in the future. The crowd who cut the roots and left the homeland to live in another country was shocked when they heard about hate killings. They were stunned, not knowing any other way to survive.

On Friday. It will be at ten o'clock at night. Around a fourteen-year-old boy went into that particular order with three plastic bags of red paint and covering his face entirely. It is a residential area of Oslo with detached houses. He knows who lives in which houses in that area. He works as a newspaper distributor during the day. Its comforting experience helped him identify homes quickly. He smashed the paint packages in front of the houses he identified. Then he moved away as if nothing had happened. Many do not see that identification. The onlookers didn't care much. Doing research from home about the label done on the outside street can sometimes be insane. Some will surely understand that many of the signs are not accidental.

It will be at four o'clock at night. The houses in that 'U' shaped order were fast asleep. On one of its facades, that black 'Benz' van came and stopped in hiding places. The three men slowly descended from it. They wore face masks so as not to identify themselves. They came carrying three large containers that they almost could not lift. They descended in that 'U' shape and walked as if observing the street. One of them stopped walking when they identified the first red spot. The others proceeded in that order with the rest of the containers in their hand.

The person standing in the first house stared at the home for a while to see any people's movement. He made sure nothing was found inside and approached the house. He slowly opened the container and poured some liquid around the house to soak its walls. Then he stood there with a 'lighter' on hand and looking clock at the wrist, as like standing on fire. Satisfied for a while, he tapped the lighter, lit it on a piece of paper, and threw it against the wall. Then he ran and left the place.

He ran and walked towards their vehicle. As he did so, he was still able to observe the flames' light emitted from both houses. He walked quickly towards the van with the satisfaction of having their plan accomplished. He knew that those who accompanied him would come there by the other side. When he reached the vehicle, the others had already gotten there by the detour. As soon as everyone got in the van, it quickly left the place like a tiger running for prey.

Like mosquitoes, the cold absorbs heat from the mouth through the skin's pores, where the needle can't enter. The houses that do not slip out heat through the walls to survive this brutal natural climate. They will take good care of it while building the house. Knowledge is passed down from time to time.

They will always select materials for building a home to withstand the cold. Then the flammable ingredients will come in more and more. The protection provided by the cold in these homes is the opposite pit in case of fire.

These homes can catch fire very quickly and become a trap full of toxic gases. The person will be mesmerized until he understands the moments that caught within it.

Just a few minutes when these homes catch fire is a time of opportunity for life and death. Often the house catches fire primarily before the fire brigade arrives. The fire brigade will then extinguish the fire. In the end, there will be more than just charcoal. Three houses caught fire today. Colored immigrant owns all three homes. The boy led the color marking in the evening is with some purpose. It now realizes that it is a planned identification work.

The fire brigade received information that many houses are burning. I heard them coming with a great noise. Meanwhile, the three homes caught fire on a massive scale. Somali nationals living in a home have come out. They are five-person in total with three children, a father, and a mother. They got into their car, and they just watched what unfold as they could do nothing for the burning house.

The Tamil family who lived next door also came out with their two children. It is sporadic for Tamils to have more than two children here. They, like the natives, have concluded that they cannot cope with having more than two children. Here only the mother and father become everything to the children. Other relationships only record in photos and videos. Sometimes they can hear voices. Video can be viewed on the smartphone now, time after technological development. Even the helpless distance from the side separated those ties. Dealing with two children alone becomes a big responsibility. Men and women forces to work all over the West.

Tamil people who left the country thus reduced the family within two. Tamil people destroy Eelam in the war. Still, they are going as refugees all over. It was only during the war that over-breeding took place in Sri Lanka. Christian and Hindu Tamil become a tiny minority in Sri Lanka. Tamils abroad are selfish and, like well, frogs. They weaken the existence of their race in their own country and celebrate the country they came to seeking refuge. Norwegian Tamils, Canadian Tamils, and French Tamils are full of pride.

Now there is not much concern that Tamils should widely adopt their culture. They act knowing that it is nobler to achieve harmony than that. But their skin and name are always treacherous. Vignesh doubts that their children should become like Mauritians with Tamil names who have forgotten Tamil.

The Tamil family also got into their car for fear of the cold. They then parked the car a short distance from their burning house. They looked at the burning home in amazement from inside the vehicle. They are frustrated that the fire brigade did not arrive quickly. When the house burned down, they broke all the rules and brought some items like their photo albums and jewelry. They are indeed treasures that cannot recover if burned. It's the opposite of how to act when the house is on fire.

It came as a surprise to everyone that no one came out of the third house. The fire engulfed the home to such an extent that people could not get close, and no one tried to go inside. A family from North India inhabited the place. Their parents also lived there. There are sometimes no people at home in their frequent trips to and from India. Many people today believe that maybe people are not in that house.

'Vidar,' who lived next door, came and stood there with sleep disturbances. Lars, who lives next door to him, also came and stood and watched what was happening. Then he looked at the house and asked, 'Aren't their people in this house, Vidar?'. 'I don't know. If there are no people at home, they want me to pick up the mail. Didn't told me anything like that in the past few days? I saw Grandpa when I was going out last Sunday. It is unknown at this time they may go to another place. We can't get close to home now. The fire brigade has come and clear about this.' told Vidar.

As they stood talking, fire-engine with firefighters rushed to the scene. The vehicles entered the order with the same urgency. Then each fire engine went first to each burning house. They first sprayed water around the burning house from their vehicles and the street and soaked them. Then they started to spread towards the burning houses.

Police and ambulances came with their voices behind the fire brigade. The people gathered there with their heads stretched out from the jacket like snails carrying tiles to rest. After the fire brigade brought the fire under control, they searched the house of the North Indian. After a while, the two bodies load into the waiting ambulance.

The burning of the three houses at the same time naturally aroused suspicion among the people there. The police understood as soon as they saw it. When the fire brigade had fully finished its work, the police began pulling barricades around the houses. After that, the police had to wait until the fireplace cooled down. Only then will they conduct their experiments and determine the fire's cause. Homes can accidentally set on fire due to a power outage or some other reason. Some deliberately set fire to the wit and get insurance money. Many houses and churches are set on fire by some miscreants who set fire to other people's property. At one time, Satan's supporters enjoyed setting the church on fire. The police's main task is to find out what caused the fire. Some were skeptical that they would follow accordingly now.

3.3 Demonstration

A few weeks later, the police convened a press conference. Somebody reluctantly called the press conference in Oslo after some journalists complained that they were trying to delay it for some reason. More reporters than usual were waiting for the press conference that day. Three colored immigrant's houses have burned in the same street. How to answer how to ignite in a particular order in a specific lane at the same time? This effort is all journalist's aspiration to find an answer. Will you see that police agree with this is premeditated violence against immigrants? Two lives have to sacrifice for this, and they are engaged to find an answer humanly.

According to the police investigation, the three houses were set on fire regularly, and it was a massive social crime by some youngsters, and they were looking for the culprits as usual.

When asked if all the victims were colored immigrants, they said they could not say for sure that it was a racially motivated attack and that the answer would come only at the end of the investigation. Some have heard these answers, and they thought the police were blurring out.

To prove the media keep neutral and have not gone surrender to the far-right; the press wrote the next day, cause of this incident was racial hatred. The government should protect the country and its name so that such attacks do not occur; They accused the far-right politics of being a catalyst for such a change. This accusation did not go down well with the far-right government. It warned that in the current state of Europe, the press and other media outlets would have to comment responsibly and that they would have to tighten laws on press freedom in the future if they made such irresponsible comments.

Many media outlets took the warning as a challenge to themselves, even knowing it was dangerous. These media outlets have sometimes made money by embezzling petty trouble caused by colored immigrants. When they had to taste the same medicine themselves today, they could not bear it. The general opinion was that this protest of the journalist was somehow beneficial. A country needs strong opposition for democracy to function well. There must be at least solid and honest media in a country where the resistance is weakening. A nation without both, even if it has democracy in its name, will float in a practical dictatorship. Now and past sailed so many countries around the world like that. A small hope was born on that day that the sweet media would be vigilant to prevent this country from going into such a predicament.

When the police last acknowledged that it was a racist attack and the media also bought it, the news caused a great deal of controversy in Oslo. Many immigrants, leftists, progressive rightists, and natives organized a large procession to express the unrest.

Someone led the parade from the Left Party, and He belonged to the second generation who came into a colored immigrant tradition. The meeting organizes by many alternative parties, including those from immigrant heritage and natives, and arranged the procession arranged to depart from the Central Railway Station. Left-wing anti-racist youth argued that they too should attend the meeting. The meeting organizers convinced them that the neo-Nazis would somehow confuse the crowd if they join with processions. Left-wing youth against racism call themselves 'Blitz.' Many of their meetings and marches have histories of violent endings. No one could agree that they should join this procession. Although they had good intentions, the paint on them stood in the way. They set an excellent example of how violence can corrupt good intentions.

Those in 'Blitz' may come even though they do not come. There is no guarantee that they will not do so. Many of those who organized the procession feared that a melee might ensue if the neo-Nazis saw them coming.

Unusually high police presence was on the day. Usually, such processions do not have such security arrangements or police presence. That day its meaning changed drastically. Those who organized the march doubted that the neo-Nazis could mobilize against the parade. The pace that such a security arrangement was in place to break it left everyone with a sigh of relief. It also gave a sense of security.

The procession was scheduled to start at the Central Railway Station at five p.m. and proceeded through Karl Johans gate (the main road to the palace in Oslo). The organizer later reported that a meeting would hold in front of the parliament, where the petition would hand over.

The meeting was more significant than expected. Everyone stood ready with the torch. The march may be deliberately confused between neo-Nazis or other radical nationalists. It can then turn into a riot. Numerous organized the crowd was dismayed by the feeling that this fear was blocking the way like a buffalo.

People began to gather in front of the Central Railway Station and outside the East Railway Station. By the time they reached four-fifty-five, many had lit their torches. The procession began to move after a short speech about why the parade holds and how important it was to maintain peace. Nothing happened in the beginning, as people feared it gave them relief.

Many were aware of the police march only when the procession moved a short distance to reach parliament. They were amazed that the tsunami had come up the mountain. That strong strategy seemed perfect for overcoming the underground parliament station, and they did not understand why this strategy. It shocked them. Many were frightened as to why so many police officers were standing in the way of a peaceful procession. Many seemed confused as to whether what should not have happened would happen. No one knows what the renaissance of a friendly country will be. They suffocated in the distance as they entered the unknown dark cave.

The police had set up a solid barrier blocking the way for them to go. Such a strategy of the police surprised many on that day. At first, about fifty policemen stood in a tight line, blocking the path so that no one could cross themselves. Next to them stood another thirty policemen as a second fence behind them. Twenty-four more policemen stood behind it as a third fence. Twenty more policemen lined up after the third fence and set up the fourth fence. And yet, they could not stop strategize. The police, seated on ten horses, built an immovable beastly wall behind it. Since then, eight police vans have created a Chinese wall there.

On the contrary, many police officers were on duty. Some policemen served in the civil service. Unprecedented barricades erect and blocked the procession. It is a dam built across the river of people to prevent flooding. Ten policemen intercepted about twenty neo-Nazis on the sidewalk of other streets crossing the procession.

Those in the parade did not understand the tremendous security arrangement for these twenty Nazis. What this meant was that many were horrified.

The police, which has historically been self-governing, is now operating under the far-right command. No one knows what is in its intent. That ambiguity pressed police there. It gave the people in the procession the opportunity to breathe only carbon dioxide.

This security strategy has given the media a unique, miraculous concern. In documenting that strategy, we were very concerned. The crowd reached the police barricade's first fence and lost its momentum completely, and it froze like a flood that could not cross the dam. If it had gone a hundred more meters, it would have reached its goal. When the prefect's meeting is over, these people will automatically disperse and disperse to the metropolis. The city will once again immerse in its serenity. That smooth event was stopped and paused for some reason.

As the crowd came to a halt, a policeman came forward to the strategy with a loudspeaker. The officer who went like that said, 'We are sorry for not allowing both the parts to march here as another group also came in procession today. So we ask both sides to disperse from here quietly. We urge you not to engage in any violence or opposition to the police.' Declared.

It was slowly becoming clear to many that this was a deliberate act by the police in the name of instigation by far-right politicians. Where are the twenty neo-Nazis? Where are the thousands of people who have left to seek justice for their unjustly taken lives?

The police put both sides on the same scale. Racism and nationalism are rampant in the unjust lie. Such racist acts of authority caused pain to the people. Police again ordered the crowd to disperse. Those left-wing politicians argued a lot with the police. They refused to comply and often issued orders to disperse immediately. Subsequently, some journalists clashed with the police. The police did not listen to them and ordered them to leave.

The rhetoric between the police and those who spoke out against them became harsher.

People refused to budge and sat on the street in their respective places to continue the tug-of-war. That made the police very angry. They again order to disperse. People did not listen to it and continued to sit there. After this people's behavior, the police warned, 'If you do not disperse for a while, we will use force to disperse and arrest you.' People are not afraid of that either. They were immobile.

Fear, not fear is not to fear at all
Despite the sky falling over the top
Fear, not fear is not to fear at all

Mothers continued to take to the streets with heroism and determination reminiscent of Bharathi's poem. The police lost patience. Arrogant to the power given by the state. They prepared for war with unarmed people. There is peace everywhere, peace before the flood, peace for the victims of the devastation of violence. That monstrous silence that preceded the tragedy stood mercilessly heavy.

The police suddenly threw some tear gas canisters into the crowd. After that, children, women, men, and the elderly began to run in fear. The women and children screamed and ran away. The men ran screaming. In this chaos, some children, the elderly, those who could not run slipped and stepped on the feet of others.

The advantage of this situation, the police attacked several people. Police on horseback were also involved in the attack. To make it even more tumultuous, people scattered regardless and ran all directions. No one could have imagined the danger of some children falling victim to that chaos.

Members of the blitz suddenly pelted the police with stones. Following that, the police fired tear gas and fired rubber bullets at the crowd. The authority on horseback used batons.

Some policemen fired their pistols in anger. Confusion prevailed everywhere. Sorrow. Helpless scream. Blood-flowing reality in Oslo, where milk and honey flow. The cry of 'Munck skrik' sounded restless in all four directions.

Police subsequently arrested some. Some of them were lying down on the street with blood oozing from their wounds. Police put plastic handcuffs on protesters. Some of those arrested were taken into police vans and sent somewhere.

The area around the parliament became a battlefield. The police did nothing to just those neo-Nazis. When the attack was in full swing, they were taken to safety and dropped off by police in the distance. This time is the government's blessing to the police, and they execute it fearless. Some media outlets carefully documented the incident without their knowledge.

Despite the outcry, there was a debate in Parliament that day on legislation to control media anarchy. One of the cornerstones of Norwegian democracy was looted and looted while the people were still awake. Far-right politicians threw the words of the weak opposition in parliament to the ground like rubbish. Those in power trampled it.

The same night, the media reported Oslo's tragedy, in which four boys and a girl kills, five were shot dead, and several arrests. The police claimed that a breach of their order caused the disaster. How did the neo-Nazis suddenly jump into this crowd? How and with whom did they suddenly disappear? Although they answered very weakly as to why the police fired tear gas at the quiet people, the media began to accuse it of being a planned act of power hysteria. That far-right government realized that its main task was to shut the media's mouth; it began to implement its new law quickly.

That far-right government was well aware that the shouts would not come out if they cut the enemy's throat. In Europe and many countries around the world, the voice of democracy was about to be bitten. Those governments needed extreme peace to make plans to solve the settlers' problem, which come as wasps.

That silence; They acted in a state of fear in a state of trembling with fear of being heard by another human being in a form where no question could be asked of anyone they want as if the far-right should be comfortable doing what they thought.

They hated the majority-known ritual of democracy. The far-right think that the practice is rooted in asking questions without doing anything properly and taking away its effect. If they get a majority, then what is their intention in the parliamentary debate? When democracy is a stumbling block to their cause, they had convinced that it is the right thing. They planned to cut down every root of the heroism of democracy and finally uproot it into like a dead tree.

The gap between the natives and the immigrants gradually widened after the Oslo incident. That, too, multiplied the hatred of the natives towards the Muslim people. The far-right has already openly accused Norway of being Islamized. They challenged to stop have Islamized if they came to power. When they came to power, they gradually enacted such laws. They forbade immigrants to pick up the bride or groom from the homeland. And then the natives passed that law further. When the natives protested against this law, they explained that justice is that the law is common to all. They succeeded in sharpening a section of the Norwegian people's hatred of immigrants. The far-right indirectly campaigned for self-destruction of their race by the racial mixing of women brought in from many foreign countries, such as Thailand. Some of them insulted the women when they went alone, and sometimes they used violence.

The majority of the natives, who had previously smiled and greeted when they saw the people of color, now suffered from the same disgust as seeing hell when they see them. Some turned their faces away. Although the first generation of immigrants could tolerate this act, the second generation could not accept it. For them, it was surprising and disturbing and provoked anger. Europa is the earth where they were born and raised. Norway is the country where they celebrated their right to the motherland. This part of the world they only know. They throbbed in anger that had snatched it away overnight.

Native people suddenly began to treat those colored Norwegian citizens as if they no longer needed them in this country. It killed the souls of people of color. Like nuclear fission that made them angry.

History is strange. It can take to see the man in the rotation. The Nazis tortured Jews in Europe. Silently that great massacre ended. Everyone longed for those gigantic industrialized murder factories' history to disappear forever from human history. Desires to protect humanity have been frustrated many times in the past. Some who have taken power over most of the same democracy gave them the right to destroy other human beings or races' voices. They pressured around humanity's neck, and they have hunted man and humanity's name of majority democracy. They have eaten humanity and retained the position. They rule with bloody hands.

During millions of lives lost in Africa, thousands of lives lost in Asia, the Gandhian nation itself plundered the innocent people's lives; Indian non-violent advocates taught Bangladesh liberation struggle a lesson. They at Mullivaikkal shed the blood of innocent people and did not complete the Gandhi family's desire for blood. Thousands of Kashmiris continued to mourn the loss of innocent lives. Thousands of lives lost the backyard of Europe, dismissed the voices of all in the context of economic aggregation. Only Kosovo was exceptional for that. Many races, like Unwanted wife, are forced to live with other races. The races languish in a naked state and force to bed-sharing with the enemy; they torture until death. Humanity is hanging there, and democracy is enslaving the majority.

The Nazis once tortured Jews, and they are now torturing Muslims in Palestine. The same Muslims are harassing Asians going to work in the Middle East. India in the past begged to British. Same India then mercilessly forgets the Mahatma and hunts down humanity, as widely as in its own neighboring countries. The country born of non-violence then greases the blood of sinners. That eats hole nonviolence. They speak unjustified as their proud non-dharma.

Humanity constantly torments by a human who cyclically forgets humanity. Those who once claimed to be humanity supporters are trampling others when the time comes and plundered society. Humanity is forever ashamed to bow its head in anticipation of human language-speaking beasts.

There is no history that all the people who incarnated on earth lived for humanity. There is no one left who does not destroy it to their advantage. That story never ends; it continues. What if it is Gandhi's land? What if Gautama Buddha's land, the birthplace of Jesus, the land where Allah appeared, is no exception. Their heirs are walking directly to how much those saints taught nonviolence. It takes place without any guilt. This unjustified is justified now.

The doors were closed for the first foreign name in the competition for jobs in Europe. The first generation had long experienced that cruelty. Then it was slowly introduced into the second generation. It was a blow to those who considered themselves the kings of this country.

The grip of hatred and racism does not end; there showed discrimination in community events—unwritten law banned from going to many places. Many were dismayed that the color of the skin was an indelible mark. A thousand stumbling blocks for the ignorant in seeing the harmonization of biology. The cruelty of finding sinners for their gain and thereby seeking growth continued.

The majority of innocents who believe in this propaganda without thinking deeply about anything became pathetic perpetrators. They began to brainwash toxic thoughts. Europe now transforms into the complete form of all this. There they saw the skin and the veil blindly, not knowing that democracy was going to stealing. Some colored immigrants forgot to compromise and became terrorists.

4.1 Sacrifice of Athens

Thiri learned a lot about Greece in school. It is also one of the premier holiday destinations for Norway's people. For that year's vacation, she eroded Vignesh to see if what was currently happening in Athens was real. Vignesh argued that we do not have the strength to talk about others' existence when our very existence is questioning. She decided to go on vacation there that year. Vignesh had no choice but to leave with her.

Ancient Athens, which was the dream of the Thiri, was once shattered and lost its face. From time immemorial, the city's reputation as the birthplace of Christian culture, democracy, and modern science consuming slowly by violence, racism, and hatred. The parks that describe as the corals of that city turned into ugly arena venues.

Time is bound to movements in the universe. On the earth, life is flourishing for times of transformation. The invasion of immigrants from Asia has sunk Europe. When it comes to self-sufficiency, it's okay to be selfish, Faber to themselves. Anger erupted in everyone's mind about whether Europe's resources would contribute to people coming from a beggar nation. The far-right and beyond them will use violence and claiming that only answer for it.

For the arrival of refugees within the EU, Greek became the first entrance. It made the Greeks even more disgusted with those colored immigrants. Their great struggle was to prevent immigrants from entering the country. No matter how they fought, it could not prevent them from entering the country. And the hate that accrues upon them unable to mitigate.

Norway deported immigrants who risked their lives to return to Greece. That and the far right did it without hesitation after coming to power. Also, the law supported them.

Visitors' fingerprints were checked within twenty-four hours and sent back to their respective countries from where they came from here. The EU wanted to drop the Dublin Accord. But the change in Europe did not allow for that. The Dublin Accord gave it unshakable strength. Accordingly, in the country where one first arrives and lands, he must apply for refugee status there.

On the other hand, Norway sent refugees back to Greece and sent its police to advise Greece on how to control the influx of refugees. The refugee problem must be addressed by Europe sharing it but handed it over to some border countries, and the rich Western European countries conveniently turned a blind eye. The move was a ploy by rich nations to escape. Border nations swarmed. The poverty that could not leave the union netted them. The selfishness of not wanting to give up a little bit of their happiness has always been the rich countries' quality mantra, and their supreme diplomacy in defending it and never has failed.

Greece is a European country rich in bribery and corruption, the path to where the money goes is unclear. Early retirement and over-subsidization have permanently weakened its economy.

In the aftermath of World War II, refugees' detention became a new reality in New Europe, just as detention camps were set up and detained people there, as planned carried out by the Nazis in history. In one European country, people were herded into largely abandoned barns uninhabitable. They fed them only cheap protein biscuits, the rest of the refugees left on the street with no help. Greece was the first country to be forced to do so. It has followed by a nuclear war between India and Pakistan. It led to millions of people from the Indian subcontinent towards Europe.

Those who are bored with refugees' arrival when they come here and there, What would happen if people flocked to Europe in the wake of Nuclear war?

As if this cruelty was not enough, the Athenians attacked the refugees who were staying in the parks at night, kept them awake there, and from time to time killed some of them. The ruling class supported this nicely, and police only arrested refugees after Athenians complained. They detain refugee children inhumanely. During such arrests, the children have separated from their parents without question and against humanity. In some places, refugees lived in houses made of cardboard boxes in places like slums. The state apparatus destroyed it and displaced the refugees. Those who stayed in the parks have then beaten again and again.

Those who came to Greece with children used to feel like have a fire in their lap. They sometimes had to spend their nights in parks and open spaces. At such times, some tried to abduct and abuse their children. They wandered as slaves of modern Europe with no right to complain about it anywhere.

Thousands of people waited in front of police stations to submit refugee status applications. The care they received for the wait was negligible. Unwritten law is in effect that only some refugee applications will have accepted for consideration on a single day. The Greeks used it as a ploy to control refugees by torture. The bureaucracy hid under the rug the refugee politics that began to stink within the EU. They could not prevent the stench of history from blowing over Europe again and again.

Turkey and Greece were divided by the Evros River like they must not fight each other every day. Refugees from Turkey, Asia, Africa, and the Middle East must cross the river into Greece to enter the EU. So if they cross that river, it would be like defiantly putting the right foot into the EU.

Greece and Turkey chased away refugees like beasts of prey. Attempts to cross the Evros River in haste increased the number of people who sacrificed their lives for that river.

They came up with a thousand dreams and fell as innocent victims in collective graves. There was a sense of what it means to pay last respects to refugees in those countries. The massive burial of refugees' corpses along the 'Evros' River banks become a new EU history.

Refugees suddenly arrived in Greece in waves after waves after the nuclear war between India and Pakistan. The sudden arrival of the refugees left the Greek face completely disfigured. They set up substantial concentration camps and began to house refugees there. They denied many basic facilities to them. Infectious diseases started to spread among the refugees as they were kept very close like the Nazis did in the past. They only give certain artificial dry foods. No one cares what the taste or smell should be. The officers considered just the prediction of calories, and it helps people not lose weight and protect their bones, skin, and muscles. It shows little concern for being human those going to eat that. What was already testing was now given a hand over to Greece.

Refugees came with permanent sores due to radiation exposure. Any could not bear the stench caused by stuffing them in those camps with no expanse and overcrowded. Diseases made them more susceptible to health problems. They quickly breathed their last and provided no medical assistance to the radiation victims. Those detention camps soon became a factory for producing corpses. It confirmed that man had become only because man continues to be a not forgetful, unchanging, cruel beast. No matter how many times a man reads history, he forgets it from time to time at his convenience. Again he makes cruelty of old wounds by new accounts. Its mourning reward to innocent human beings.

*

Although Vignesh insisted that going to Athens was not safe for them, Thiri reluctantly took him there. They do not currently have any problem purchasing the facilities that can buy for a price. The Greeks did not want to discriminate against those who support income-generating industries.

The tragedies that happen outside are not even visible inside the five-star hotels. It orbits the earth as individual universes without worry. There will be jubilation, dancing, famine-free laughter, delicious food, and wine that will produce long nights of revelry.

Athens renounced its pride, forgot humanity, and with unforgivable atrocities, society lay on its knees. Taking care of refugees alone in Greece proved to have nothing to do with the words coming from Western European countries' tongues and their role in the world scene.

Countries like India and Pakistan have not thought deeply about the consequences of launching an irresponsible nuclear war. The new politicians of the Gandhi Nation hated to think of Gandhi as a man whose non-violence should praise. They have concluded that they are all dead philosophies in the flow of the world. They fully believed that the economic and military might open the 'Gates of Motsam' to the world. They dared to do anything for it.

Although sent those currently coming to another European country to Greece directly to detention camps, a certain number still lived in some parks and slums. Those who continue to apply for refugee status these days have relentlessly pursued it. Such scenes were utterly hated by the far-right in Greece. They planned to teach a legitimate lesson to these refugee groups ravaging their cities.

Thiri tried very hard and stayed in a hotel near the 'Petro Rally' police station. That joy doubled when they got off the plane and went to the hotel. She was fully aware of the 'Petro Rally' police station to stand on the hotel's balcony made her famous. The days of coming to Athens and going to the 'Acropolis' are now over. The younger generation began to research whether this is still happening here today.

It was early in the morning when sleep tightened. The alarm sounded that it was the destruction of sleep's comfort and serenity. It woke both father and daughter from sleep. Vignesh was bored with the twists and turns of the place where he came on holiday.

Still, he managed not to speak up so that she would not be distracted. She woke up Vignesh and invited him to the balcony with her. Vignesh didn't like it but went out for his daughter's aggression. The early morning cold of Europe chilled his body violently.

When she arrived in Athens from Norway, she carefully carried a video camera and a telescope. Detective eagerness and excitement overflowed in her. Vignesh wondered if that longing and excitement would get in trouble. The Greeks are no longer the old Greeks. The value they gave to the law was also meager. If they know some will misrepresent themselves, they will dare to destroy it at any cost. Vignesh predicts that the Greeks will not sway by it. Protecting oneself from the future and present danger is an essential human trait. He thought it would apply to the Greeks as well.

Thiri used her telescope to see how many people had gathered in front of the 'Petro Rally' police station and what they were doing. Many men, women, children stretched their queue to stretch and stretched endlessly. The sequence disappeared like a Vasuki tail, invisible to the naked eye in the dark. There was still plenty of time for the police station to open. Darkness and cold continued to unleash their grip. The body loses the ability to produce heat. The southward movement of the sun continued, and it still makes uncomfortable. The treatment of refugees in Greece is of great concern.

The country has placed all decision-making power for refugees in the police's hands. It left the lives of many in individuals' hands and became the key to denying refugees' human rights. In practice, the refugees in Greece had no rights and forces to live in a more disgusting condition than animals. It has become a time of punishment even for that life conducted on the street. Little by little, these atrocities began to leak out.

That is now blatantly proven. Instead of evoking sympathy for Greece, its impact has radiated like anger among immigrants living in Europe, a section of conscientious objectors, caring leftists, and compassionate religious people. They often painfully rubbed histories that could never bury as memories.

Thiri took her video camera in her hand after that put binoculars on the table and filmed the people standing in front of the police station. Vignesh feels like he took Oriental Garden Lizard, walking down the street and putting it on his lap. The condition of the people and the commotion gave him much fear.

World change quickly led Norway to a situation where colored immigrants were treated very differently as second-class citizens. Although Greece is a European country, it is a developing country compared to Western European countries. When it is under load, it precedes the Stone Age solutions. Vignesh was tired of standing there constantly in the cold, wondering what we could do about it? Then he went back to the room seeking warmth.

Thiri videotaped them for a while. When she thought it was enough, a vehicle came very fast towards that side. There was something that unknowingly aroused some suspicion to see the jeep. It came at breakneck speed.

Thiri 'Focus' on the vehicle and its occupants and started capturing the video. For a moment, she could not believe it. Again in a hurry, she looked at it as 'Focus.' No doubt. She decided they were machine guns.

Thiri could not think for long. She continued to video that vehicle continuously from the balcony. The tragedy she expected happened there. Those in the jeep indiscriminately opened fire on those standing there. They staged their assassination with four machine guns. Thiri tilted her head very low.

The shooting victims were on the ground like sparrows; The fallen curled up like a Diplopoda and throbbed in agony. Men, women, and children were all targeted, and they shot them like animals of no value. Their mourning went to the corners of the universe and blood-soaked the street. Humanity died tragically again and again on the streets of Athens.

Some moments were unbelievable, as it turned out. She felt nauseous and also wanted to vomit. Hands were sweating cold. She continued to yawn and yawned. The vehicle quickly disappeared after shooting the refugees.

Vignesh rushed out, hearing the sound of gunfire. He understood the situation immediately. He hurriedly pulled Thiri inside. He realized that if anyone saw Thiri filming, their lives would be in danger. 'What nonsense are you doing? Should we risk our lives against ourselves? ' He looked at his daughter and scolded her. She didn't seem to care much about what he was saying. She wept bitterly at the thought of what she had seen. Vignesh could not be yelling at her after that. After a while, Thiri began to talk as if she had overcome herself.

'Why are you unnecessarily scared? Do we kill innocent people mercilessly? We have good evidence of catching murderers. We will give it to the police. Come, dad, we will bring this to the police. ' At first, Vignesh did not know whether to cry or laugh. Then he growled, 'Where are you from, you think? Here, the police and the Neo-Nazi would have done the impetus together. If we go to the police and tell them we have evidence, they will throw us first in jail. In the current situation, the same thing will happen to you if you go to the Norwegian Police.

Do you not know the danger that comes with taking this video? Do not you think about it? Tacking video here is not a game at all. We should not be unnecessarily involved in this. You take your clothes and get ready quickly.' 'Why are you so scared? It's not going to happen.

Dad, please don't be restless. Well, I'm not going to the police now. No one is likely to have observed the video taken in the dark. Be quiet, Dad.' Said Thiri. Like you videotaped them, you never know who videotaped us. Leave the explanation and collect your clothes,' said Vignesh and left. She wandered off, not wanting to argue over it, as if she had insulted her father in her mind.

Vignes went down to the front desk, and he asked the woman who was there to make the bill because they wanted to leave the room. She looked at them in disbelief. Her sight looked as if Thiri did not expect it and bothered him for a few moments. After that, she looked at the account and gave the receipt as if it was not relevant. When Vignes received it, he asked her to call a taxi.

The newly formed barricades extended beyond the Petro Rally police station's start from the hotel. Police and ambulance crews quickly removed the bodies and wounded them. Understood that Thiri's camera would tell out a thousand undeniable facts. She did not know precisely how many people died. She thought at least fifty people must have died. The guilt of not giving evidence and running away from duty haunted her. She did not speak, thinking of her father's trembling.

When the taxi arrived, the two hurriedly got into it. Vignesh noticed two policemen entering the hotel as the vehicle headed towards the airport. It's time for humans to wander around with cameras on every cell phone. It is a city full of tourists. Police suspect someone may have filmed the incident in the early hours of the morning. The police, who have already covered up many matters, do not want to leak this matter out either. Vignesh feared that they would confiscate passports and cameras and lock himself and his daughter in detention camps if they found evidence. Until the first murder, the man will have a shiver of guilt. If the first murder, then it will be the eggplant and banana cutting story for many. Greece committed the first murder a long time ago. Vignesh now understands that this will be a story of cutting the eggplant and banana.

Vignesh was sweating profusely. It was a pity for the Thiri to see that he was sweating. She could not see the whole meaning of her father's fear and suffering. 'No one could have seen what I took. How many people can they arrest on suspicion of being like that? Isn't that the propaganda against them? Daddy is suffering unnecessarily,' she thought. She did not speak to her father for fear of being scolded. The driver once saw them. Then he drove the car to the airport without saying anything.

When the taxi arrived at Athens International Airport, Vignesh had little courage. He hurriedly paid for the cab and walked and ran into the airport by dragging the suitcase. Although she was surprised to see her father like that, she did not speak and calmly walked behind him.

Inside the airport, like a mad man, leaving Thiri behind, he runs towards the ticket office. She looked at him and shook her head sideways, and she walked comfortably in the direction Dad was running. He first approached the Norwegian airline office with the name 'Norwegian' and tried to get a ticket for Oslo's next flight. It did not work. He relentlessly approached the office of a Scandinavian airline called 'SAS.' Both of them got air tickets there. Vignesh did not care about the price. The character of the father is known to the Thiri. She understood that he was only bent on escaping the impending danger. Thiri thought that he did not realize that money is a big deal. The thought that Dad's fear might sometimes be justified also came to the fore from time to time. Then she follows the dad without worry about whatever is going to happen.

4.2 Vignesh House

Vignesh and Thiri just arrived home from Oslo airport. Thiri was a little shocked and bored by her father's intense emotion. She is sad that halfway through the holidays, confusion and anxiety arise.

After taking a shower for a while, she picked up her camera. She flipped it over.

Seeing this, Vignesh sighed and snatched it from her. Unexpectedly, 'Why are you still snatching it?' She whimpered angrily. After Vignesh relaxed himself a little, he said, 'Look here... Europe has changed forever. If you deliver this somewhere, They will stamp on us that we are far-right enemies. Then they will arrest us on some occasion and send us somewhere else.

All this happens in Europe now. They can create many false cases to do so in the present situation. Please, do not get into trouble like this now. Many years ago, Greece laid down laws for immigrants. At the time, Iranians were the ones who struggled against that by keeping their mouths stitched without eating any food. Those who lived comfortably in their own country set up slums on Athens' streets and lived in them. Like the Iranians, the Afghans fought. Was there any use for them? No. They later treated refugees like dangerous animals without giving value to humanity. The situation has only gotten worse. That situation will come here too soon. It affects not only refugees but also foreigners as a whole. That, too, can quickly act us with colored skin. We are not the first to be sacrificed like cashews in sweet. Do you understand?' said Vignesh. He seemed confused by fear and anxiety.

'I do understand. We started to suffer it everywhere at school, at work, on the street, and so on. But because we are hiding it, the world will not know that such a horrible thing is happening in Europe? We need to tell the world what is going on as much as possible. We are now direct witnesses. Today, the Greek police lying on television about three people were shot dead in a fight between foreigner and native. Isn't it a betrayal of people like us to hide it from the world even though we have evidence to the contrary?

Somehow this evidence needs to be known to the outside world. Must leak a drop in the Greek cover to the outside world. We must identify those behind the betrayal and pretend to be good uncles. Am I right, Dad? Our lives are precious. What moral or justification is there in obscuring the evidence against injustice for that, Dad? Tell me.'

'What you say may be right for you now. Your age and space are like that, in this age where we have changed direction at a young age. Leave it at that. That's why we can't allow you to witness the killings and take them to the media or go to the police. The consequences are a series of stories,' said Vignesh. 'Then what do you say we can do, Dad?' Asked Thiri.

Vignesh thought for a while. 'In a way, this evidence must come out, which could let's reduce the huge tragedies that will happen in the future. For that, it is good to reveal this, though. If that is the case, then maybe we should keep our identity secret.' He decided in his mind.

He did not understand first how to do it. Then he created a fake email and decided to send this video from that address. Knowing that it would not be safe to send it from home, he decided to go to the Central Railway Station and dispatch it from one of the 'Netcaffe' there. Then he looked at the Thiri and said, 'Well, I'm sending this to some media. Did you take a pen drive?' The video was recorded in the '.MP4 file' on the 'pen drive' brought by Thiri. He then instructed Thiri to stay home carefully and headed towards the Central Railway Station.

He first uploaded his video to a website that shares '.MP4 files'. He then emailed its full address to several newspapers and television companies. Did his work as well. Its reaction began after that.

Newspapers and television companies released the video after proving it was genuine. While it caused a great deal of controversy, many were brainwashed into campaigning by the far-right sidelined it without exaggerating. They refused to believe. Some people thought violently that this is the solution to such problems. Only a few rose against injustice.

Protests and demonstrations against Greece took place in several cities following the video's release. People of color and some natives largely attended it.

Many of the natives fled in fear. Only the extreme left and some of the more courageous leftists, the compassionate clergy, and the few who respect humanity dared to march with these people of color. More and more governments are putting pressure on the media to keep the protests out of the press. Despite those pressures, some media outlets raised questions. They introduced that affair to the world to some extent.

The Greek government announced that it would investigate the incident following some other governments' pressure. Although the announcement gave some relief to Thiri, Vignesh thought it was just an eye-wipe. He counted how many such eye-wipe had taken place in the history of their country. That news and its loss, immersed in the following report, disappeared in some time. That is the way of the world. His understanding is that it runs at a speed that you forget to immerse yourself in it. His prediction was correct. World history is going in the wrong way, making him very sad.

4.3 Machine eyes

Vignesh returned home from work that day. He used to park his car in his garage instead of parking it on the street. Vignesh still went to park his car in the garage today. When he saw a black car that he had never seen before, he parks in the doorway of the parking lot. In that car, some people were sitting inside waiting for someone. They looked different to look them. Their faces did not look good to him. Vignesh did not understand why they were parked here. He hurriedly parked his vehicle in the garage and locked the door, and walked quickly.

Vignesh, who had left his vehicle parked, ran and walked towards his house, not seeing them in fear. He has the urge to let run. He was shaking inside. Shame and self-loathing dragged the leg out of it. He walked faster than that too. Fear that never existed made him fear unstoppably today.

Their figure was the reason for that. Standing them in this place is even scarier than that. Time is not good now. Anything can happen. Though it could happen anywhere, he stepped quickly.

Suddenly he saw people getting out of the vehicle and rushing towards him. He was shocked when he saw it. The head spun as if dizzy. They were now wearing masks. He was covered with a black bag in the blink of an eye. Then they lifted him and put it in the vehicle. The hands and feet were tied tightly with tape.

Fear that Vignesh would end his life today was heartbreaking. It climbed electrically into the brain by nerves. The brain translated it and froze him in an instant. 'Muruga! Prevent me from them without any attack, he murmured to himself. In the hand of God, he gave his life by the grip of his disability.

They put Vignesh under the seat of the vehicle and trampled him. They kicked him by shoe feet again and again. He pierced all parts of the body with footwear indiscriminately, and Vignes was in unbearable pain all over his body. He felt the hotlines coming from his nose. It was mouth-watering. The fact that life itself is over was heartbreaking. For a few moments, Murugan had to forget. 'Don't hit me, don't hit me,' he begged them in Norwegian. His prayer and supplication fell on deaf ears. They continued to attack him. Vignesh fainted when he thought that he would die like this. After that, they stopped beating. The vehicle was heading towards a hut on a hill.

*

When he woke up, he was inside a small wooden house. He could see that the house was on a hill. The house had only one room. A masked man stood in front of Vignes like a stone statue, and his hands tied behind his back. The man's eyes shone brightly through the hole in the mask. The red color of his eyes disturbed Vignes. The man had tattooed prominent figures on his hands, one of that swastika.

He had the swastika in his body from Ganesha's hand in many colors and shapes. Vignesh shuddered to see that swastika. Vignesh does not know what the sign was for it. Vignesh knows where it has taken place in world history.

He understands that it killed nearly seventy-nine million people. He understood how much he would hate it if someone came to tattoo it. You cannot remove hatred by giving him, love. That, too, cannot remove the hatred that rages over other races of people. That fact frightened him. Yemen appeared before him without a rope (Yemen will use it to take human lives). He looked at him trivially with a fiery eye. The Vignesh head buzzed to think of the sight of Yemen. He felt like fainting again.

There have been a few racist murders in history in Norway. It culminated in the murder of a foster child, Benjamin Hermanson. Then the proliferation and personality of the neo-Nazis disturbed people of color. Although the murder was a tragic act, it showed how much the Norwegian people loved humanity. Vignesh still remembers how it shook the city of Oslo. The torchlight procession of the people who rallied against it is still green in his memory today. It expressed the consensus of the Norwegian people against racism. They spoke loudly to the neo-Nazis and the world about their faith in humanity.

Those people have changed now. People began to shift to campaigning on top of the campaign as 'Grindstone also will move if continually hit by.' The far-right campaigned hard against Islam and its restrictions as the enemy of the white race. Next, they loaded into the cage the entire race of people of color and their culture. They found flaws in all. They succeeded in identifying the sinners who would eventually eliminate.

Native young women were immoral and subject to some harsh Islamist attacks in Grønland. There is no doubt that some of the colored immigrants with such thinking are wagging their beards. It's the risk of pouring oil on themselves and igniting it. The actions of such individuals are indecent. They became the first patients and victims of their own medicine. At first, the hatred of the neo-Nazis and some of the natives towards the Islamists was outrageous. Then it spread to all races. They regarded colored immigrants as enemies. They wanted to get rid of them. The answer is ready for them.

The neo-Nazis began to speak angrily towards Vignesh.

'Black pig! Do you think that you are is a great genius? You must have destroyed the video taken in Greece, Or it should be left unpublished. How big of a problem did you create by releasing it without both? In return, you must give up your life today. Did you see it? Did you see how we know that? Do you know how many of our loyalists are in the police? You are under the impression that you have done all the work carefully. Is that so? But since Athens, we're starting to monitor you. Then we know that you went to Central Railway Station and sent that video from 'Nettcafe' there. You failed to hide it. We now have video footage of everything observe there. Did you know that if the police won't, they will arrest you as a terrorist and imprison you? But our goal is not to feed blacks like you alive. Our purpose is to weed. Weeding out blacks and letting whites thrive, he said. He gestured towards Vignesh as he raised his hand in anger. Vignesh somehow managed to escape from him. The insatiable desire to see Thiri back somehow alive throbbed in his mind like a fish thrown ashore. He descended into the ordinary human nature of begging for life.

'It went wrong. Please forgive me. Everything like that will never happen again. Trust me.' said Vignes. 'Shut up, black pig! I did not bring you here to teach you or to forgive you. Blacks like you are making this world ugly. Our mission is to liberate them and cleanse this world. That's what I already told you. Our work is going to start again with you in Oslo.' He growled. At the same pace, he lifted his leg and kicked the ground. Seeing that, Vignes trembled for a moment. He angrily went outside, and three masked men came in with a 'baseball bat in hand. The agony of thinking Vignesh is dying spread all over his body. Fainting came.

*

When Vignesh remembered, he realized that they had to throw him away in the entrance on his way to the forest. The crowd gathered around him. He could feel the blood all over his body. Must break the limb. He could not shake them.

Again and again, the dizzying pain hit him, rippling. The tongue is dry and sore with thirst, and the body does not have the power to move or lift the hand.

Many people saw him in different ways. Some people seemed to spit in disgust. It was as if some were sympathizing with the view that he was a sinner. The sky seemed multi-colored. He felt himself flying in the sky and stretching out his hand towards the sun, putting him at the center point and circling the universe. Is the sun above, or the universe without the sun? Vignesh fainted again. The images of those men darkened the troubled eyes. The pictures of the people around shaded the troubled eyes.

When he woke up again a few hours later, he understood that he was in the hospital. There are still good people in the world. Thiri stared at his face anxiously, and Vignes could not believe the luck he got in his life. Seeing Vignes' eyes wide open, Thiri kissed her father on the forehead in a hurry. He is her only possession in the world. She could not imagine life without her father.

4.4 The end of a family

It cannot change the eternal boon as time passes quickly, and many of the drastic changes will come to the world in its traveling. Colored immigrants need their wisdom to find a way to survive rather than the current fast going time. In some parts of Oslo, where 'ghettos' have become intoxicated, colored people have become isolated. Elsewhere colored immigrants previously bought detached homes. Those who bought such detached houses sold their houses to natives in fear, looking at apartments where the natives continue to live and now purchase apartments there.

Buying such an apartment is a big deal for people of color. If the natives lived too much in an apartment building, they refused to sell the condo to people of color. Natives people don't want to sell it to them even if they pay a high price. Simultaneously, people of color could easily buy apartments in buildings where fewer natives lived. Fear that such an apartment would be the target of racist attacks in the future plagued colored immigrants.

Native people and colored immigrants became polar, slowly disintegrating, giving the far right a sense of inner joy. They did not stop this. They are encouraged as this is ideal individual freedom. This freedom made it easier for their attackers as these 'ghettos' only made up of colored immigrants. They predicted that all those killed in the attack on that particular street would be colored immigrants. The far-right government does not care about pushing colored immigrants into a weak spot.

At night time, colored immigrants no longer want to go anywhere. People who continue used to go in the nighttime are African and Caucasians. They have a body that can take any physical challenges. Asians have always been more petite than Caucasians or Africans. It caused problems with physically confronting Caucasians or Africans. However, anger and courage are generous to Asians.

People who go to places like 'disco' at night sometimes kill and their corpses are floating in the river or sea. The far-right government has said it will appoint more police when it comes to power. Then it flew their words into the air as usual. That halved their service at the very least of the police's funds. These officials did not care so much about killed people of color. They will do what needs to be done for formality and end the investigation.

The indifference of the police allowed the neo-Nazis and extremists to act independently. They now began to work fearlessly to kill the colored immigrants. These changes were the last to enter Norway. Such changes plagued Eastern Europe first and then the poorer countries of Western Europe. It then conquered the rich countries of Western Europe. Eventually, it gripped the Scandinavian countries as well.

There is no history that neo-Nazis will germinate only in a developing country. Norway was one of the wealthiest and most prosperous countries when it sprouted in Norway in the nineties. A new history has shown that the most hated are those with the most facility. It overshadows the government's intense concern at that time.

Some people always look down on other human beings with an inferiority complex. When such hatred occurs, they are aid by childish reasons to attack other human beings. Those who hate colored immigrants, and those like that people hating colored immigrants, believe the reasons perfectly. It was much easier for such people to feed hatred on Islam after the Nine Eleven in the United States.

They campaigned that now, after the Indo-Pakistani war, the time had come to exterminate all colored immigrants. It also facilitated the incorporation of many more members into such an organization. The neo-Nazis began to implement it very successfully. The far-right government did not see this activity until it was dangerous. It caused unbearable sadness to many. The question arose in many about how they could forget past European history.

*

Vignesh suddenly woke up. He was sweating and drenched in sweat. The memory of dreaming of being shot by four neo-Nazis even though he tried to leave the place in a hurry did not leave his mind. When he tried to go back to bed thinking what a dream it was, He suddenly heard the ambulance and the police's sound. He felt something was wrong somewhere. Unwilling to get out of bed, he continued to lie down. Vignes jumped out of bed when he heard the sound of ambulances and police descending into their main lane to his house. The urge to see what would happen drove him. He took his clothes and walked out in a hurry. He slowly opened the door to Thiri's room once and looked after them about she did not wake up by sound. But she was in a deep sleep. He slowly locks the outside door without waking her up. Then he walked in the direction of the blue glow.

The house was four hundred meters from Vignesh's house, and a Somali family inhabited it. They are free and self-sufficient human beings. Unlike the traditional Somali family, Vignesh never saw the Somali wife or her daughter wearing the veil.

They are the ones who have adopted modernity and freedom even though they have not forgotten their culture.

They have three sons and a daughter. The boys were between the ages of eighteen and twenty-two. They are always in the habit of hanging out as friends. Vignes would occasionally see them on the street. Sometimes they would wander around in the car. Then they will travel listening to a song in some language. If they see him, then they will show their hand and leave. Vignesh will also show his hand in response.

Amid this hatred, Vignes will see some young Norwegian women coming to their homes. The young men would pick up the women and drive them around in their cars. They sowed hatred among the young community as well. However, some young people who understood it boldly got used to attending. Seeing that gives Vignes confidence. The neo-Nazis also beat such natives youth to wander along with the blacks. Don't fear for that too; Then they go out with people of color.

Vignesh could not control his desire to know what had happened there. He ran and walked towards the house.

When he got there, the police pulled the barricades so that no one would get close. That prevented Vignesh from going inside.

After a while, they rushed to the brothers' mother and loaded her into an ambulance. The ambulance also flew away at lightning speed.

More and more police officers arrived and disembarked in police cars. They were all immersed in so many jobs as photos and traces. Vignesh stood there with a sort of agony, not knowing what had happened to the other family members. They shook his head uncontrollably.

When Vignesh stood there tired and about to return home, they brought it one by one and loaded that into the ambulance. Vignesh couldn't believe it. The assembled people were shocked. Their faces widened in surprise that no one could feel it. Vignesh could not imagine that this would happen near his home. After covering the five with white bags and loading them, the police continued to collect clues.

Vignes did not like to stand there anymore. He walked towards his house. The mind became very disturbed by what Vignes saw. He stumbled as if his legs were shaking and refused to move. Vignes could not believe that Vignes would continue to do so. He could not digest that fact. He felt dizzy and dizzier from everything.

The next day, at a press conference, police reported that they had been shot dead. Vignesh was startled for a moment. It was only when the incident took place that the body shuddered in a dreamy sense. The police, as usual, formally promised that they would catch the culprits as soon as possible.

The march that led to the assassination took place in Oslo. Police in riot gear stormed a rally on Friday, removing hundreds of protesters by force and transported them away. Vignesh also got beaten in the shoulder and leg. Murders and demonstrations are now routinely carried out in Oslo. Indiscriminate beating the demonstrator is a police routine now. No one understands whether this situation will ever change again. When he thinks about it, he gets confused. He did not know the answer to this, but he knows running to other countries is not an answer. Radiation continues to haunt Sri Lanka to the point where it is impossible to return and live there. No significant changes have taken place in humans. He now understood for the first time how to become a genuine refugee after so many years. The body shuddered, the mind burned. Feel shame to ate. Vignesh does not know where to go.

Vignesh forgot to get the letter that day. When the TV news was over, he went out to pick up the letter. Slowly he opened the mailbox and picked up the letter. Then he locked it and took the key and returned. That's when he suddenly noticed it. The front of the house was painted red and still wet. For a moment, Vignesh felt sick. He understood well what that meant. He first thought of calling the police. Then he gave up the idea. He thought, 'We have to save ourselves.' There is hatred everywhere. I can't trust anyone. The same goes for the police. He decided not to call the police. For a moment, he did not understand what to do next. The next moment he realized the danger of being at home. Vignesh hurriedly ran inside. I do not know what to do there. Then he ran towards the room of the Thiri.

Thiri could not understand the father's action, who came as a ghost. Then she got up from the bed and looked at her father, 'What kind of demon is running away from you?' She asked. 'Hurry up... get ready... get ready quick... They are going to burn down our house. Get ready quick without fail,' said Vignesh. But nothing is clear to the Thiri. She looked at her father in amazement.

Seeing this, Vignesh asked, 'Why are you frozen without saying anything?'. 'Then what are you talking about? come here and told me to get ready quick, but what are you talking about it? Dad.' She said. 'Oh god, you are a girl who understands nothing. They are blowing paint in front of our door. They are going to set fire to our house at night.' 'I know, Dad. If they are blowing paint, they will put fire to the house too.' said Thiri. 'Get ready then,' said Vignesh. 'Why we want to run from our home, Dad? I will call the police and tell what was going on, and see what is happening.' said Thiri. Anger came to Vignesh. 'Now, they start showing the character of the 'racist' in the police too. They will come here only after the house burns down, even if you call them. If anyone asks why you are late, they will tell you they had a job over their head.

Are you going to burn to death in this house?' Asked Vignesh. 'OK Dad, OK Dad... I reveal. I don't know what it takes and what it leaves,' said Thiri. 'Take only those most important ones and put them in a bag,' said Vignesh.

It took a long time for the Thiri to come out. Vignesh sighed as the hours went by. She had a heavy bag in her hand. Instead, she carried a large bundle on her back. Vignesh snatched it from her and threw it into the car. Then he locked the house's front door and hurriedly got into the car. After thinking for a while, he drove towards Balan's house.

Balan was shocked at first to hear the story told by Vignesh. After dinner, he wants to gather some more friends and will go to Vignesh's home in the car. Balan said that to Vignesh. He insisted that it would be better to wait there and film, setting the fire.

Vignesh did not like that idea at all. He had already filmed in Greece and well-remembered his experiences. 'What a useless thing, Balan,' he muttered. 'No brother, they will put fire every colored people home if we don't act now. We have to put an end to it today.' Said Balan.

'I like it too, but do you know that Norway is no longer what we think it is? If we go out in the middle of the night, the police will suspect us. The neo-Nazis would kill us if they knew we were filming them or coming after them. It's unnecessary work. The house itself had to be left to burn. That's what's good for everyone. Did we come here with a house? As well as can we bring it home there? If the home gets fire, it will provide money by insurance. If life is lost, there is nothing to buy,' said Vignesh. Anxiety and fear overwhelmed him.

'If we were scared like this, They will climb on us like the tree and dance on that, brother. If you get cuff and cuff and bend for someone, you must be an idiot; if you are cuffing someone again and again who bent already, you too also an idiot. We must do like one cut with two-piece is the end of the great solution. Another way unnecessarily, we will have to shed blood,' said Balan stubbornly.

'You talk without understanding today's situation. When our governments no longer let us fight, We must beg them to let us live. That's how politics goes now in Norway. Everything that was once known as shame now justifies to them. They will no longer be nervous about anything. Human hunting will be their hobby in the future,' said Vignesh.

'Brother, you don't need to be unnecessarily scared. We don't need to do anything. We are just going to watch what happens there,' said Balan.

'Brother, They tried to murder me in Oslo for a video taken in Athens by Thiri. You know that too. Do you need it now? That, too, is one of the 'Strong boys' in neo-Nazis in the front line. I heard about that, and they can beat very badly who captures. They can kill too. Before putting your feet, you must know the depth. Don't just go and get stuck in their path. They only have one job that hunts people of color. Why do we go there and fall like prey? Tell me, please? ' Said Vignesh.

'Brother, it is not right that you should frighten us like this. We will go there first. Inside the car, we will sit quietly without their knowing. Let's take the video. That's all. Let's go and take Mohan and Rupan to the party.

Just don't be afraid, brother. We can bring the Tamil weapon for some safety. You just have to use it and escape if anything happens.' Again and again, Balan flirted with his plan.

'Can we believe it? Don't we know which direction wins to hit? Not sure which direction they will come from here? Well, let's see what happens if you dare so far,' said Vignesh.

Those memories came to Vignesh once. That was when he was young. It was common for Tamil youth to go to 'disco' entertainment venues. If there is any problem, the Tamils will probably have to back down. Sometimes chili powder is used as a weapon to be chased if they come into the house.

What would it be like if it caught the eyes of those who hate putting chili in their mouths? They begged invisibly with tears and are still immortal memories today.

*

At one o'clock that night, Balan, Vignesh, Mohan, and Ruben got out in Balan's car. They first went to Vignesh's house. They had two video cameras and a Tamil weapon in a plastic bottle ready. They approached Vignesh's house and continued to drive past his house without stopping there. It was apparent to them at the time that nothing untoward had happened there. Then they parked their car in a hidden place. They kept the cameras ready and waited for the Nazis. While waiting, Mohan and Ruban leaned back and snored as if they had no worries. It made Balan a little annoyed, but he said nothing.

'From the moment man loses humanity, he begins to hunt other human beings or their resources. Seen in that light, it seems that many human beings are neither born nor live without humanity. Neither history nor the present has changed that character from a human. Man has always proved that he is an animal. With the magic wand of language, only his tongue sprinkles the magic powder of 'ism.' Thereby seducing other human beings. Those 'isms' wander in vain as empty words that many do not understand. The reappearance of man is grim. It buries the poisons in the easy word that everyone understands. The harvest takes away human lives. Reality shows people who fly for themselves. It always reflects Darwin's theory and Hitler's activism.' Like Vignesh thought.

The eyes of those who were waiting for the neo-Nazis look after them, look after them, at last, they bored well. The moment the focus began to turn in a different direction, a vehicle came with lightning speed and stopped. Four people got out of it. Seeing that, Vignesh and Balan started videotaping them.

One of the neo-Nazis found it by chance. Realizing this, Vignesh froze for a moment as if in a trance. He then managed to yell at those in the backseat, "Boys, get up, get up."

At the same time, he continued to film. Mohan and Ruban get up, awakened as is. Vignesh said, 'Take the chili powder and keep it,' and continued filming them. Fear has come to Balan. He put down the camera and tried to start the car.

One of the Nazis, who ran with a baseball bat toward them when he found out they were starting the car, hit the car's rear window. Soon after, Balan raced the car and picked it up slowly at that point to move. The rearview mirror shattered and fall like rock-candy inside. The two Nazis grabbed Mohan by the hole opened and tried to pull him out, and Ruben threw the chili powder and punched them through the forehead's hole. They stood unbearably that chili powder was burning their eyes and danced without vision in the street. Ruben said, 'Come on, next time, we will feed a soup that will give irritation inside your whole body.' Balan slowly pushed the person standing in front of his car by moving the car slowly toward him. Gradually increasing its speed, the frightened Nazi abruptly withdrew. In the sense of freedom, their vehicle drove away from the place.

When this was over, the Nazis noticed many people peeking out of their homes. It went to shame and disgrace to them. They moved away in a rage that some black pigs had confused their plan.

The following day, Vignes, who came home, used kerosene and a heavy water sprayer to erase the color mark. Then in the mailbox and from the door, he removed their names. He thought it would have been safer to take a post box in the post office and go there to pick up the letters. The post office has a low capacity to offer that service now, and it has caused significant problems.

5.1 Gypsies

'Marxism, Maoism, capitalism so one like this expired 'ism' can't prevent suffering humanity, but it's divided the world to many polar. Although there is no major flaw in these 'isms,' there is no history of those who handled it with humanity. Their philosophy is to deceive and oppress other human beings by this 'ism.' Many politicians need the addiction of nationalism more than these 'isms' nowadays. They want nationalism to cover up their bankruptcies to drag people to the heights of emotion to justify injustice to make more people believe it. The poisonous teaching that nationalism has destroyed the world many times. There seems to be nothing better than nationalism in those 'isms' to make people into herds. History has shown time to time again that people who are bounding by nationalism will interfere with anything without question.

The breath of the far right is becoming harsher nationalism. It pushed back all the political parties and occupied the people with rage. It arrogantly questioned whether any companionship was found as nationalism to crown the title. They cover up their political weaknesses; the mania and persecution of the innocent have extended use worldwide. The selfish person who considers it fair will not worry about the suffering, loss, or destruction of other innocent human beings by a politician who renounces humanity and mental illness. By a politician who has only selfish eyes, he can spread the deadly fire of nationalism without guilt and warm up with it, and Now such politicians have multiplied all over the world.

To be born into a nation where the poison of nationalism thriving fuels racism and some cold-blooded politicians have the upper hand is painful of the one who loves humanity. The country is divided and has a bloodshed history; that will always be the case. It will take the lives of thousands or millions of people without any guilt, in defiance of all human civilization.

Nationalism will bring awakening and become the face of the blood-drinking possessed demon. About social Darwinism: the strongest man deserves to live in the world. Those nationalists did not misunderstand what they were thinking or talking about at the time. Those who believe against it will make enemies and then will annihilate them. It is a fact that such thoughts do not perish in human society. Those who are mature enough to see it slowly let out and warm up when the time is right should have no conscience about its disadvantages.

Individual worship will always prevail under the far-right and hard nationalists' rule. They will sometimes cut income taxes well and serve the minority employers and the rich. The vast majority of the poor and vulnerable will suffer more and more. They will go down trying to find a reason for it and sustain themselves.

It is not uncommon for them to drag in alternative races or alternative politicians and blame them. In history, it is a sequel, which is to be immortalized in the people's memory forever. It welcomes misery today because it has vanished from people's minds. Sometimes far-right politicians rewrite history with their magic speeches. Man is not going to continue to be free from that tragedy.

Sarkozy, the former French president, proved some time ago that the Right-wing politicians would do anything for their selfish ends. He deported Romani people from France on the two thousand nine and ten. Then the world shut up. What Sarkozy needed was the overwhelming support of the native electorate. He did not take count that humanity would perish. Many do not understand the difference between those who supported Hitler in World War II and those who support Sarkozy. Will destroy humanity by the selfishness of a particular race or country. That would be right for them. That would not be right for society or a man of conscience.' like Vignesh thought of a long philosophical explanation.

'Many could not believe that such an event had taken place in Europe in the year two thousand ten. At the time, the European Union strongly opposed it. They were shocked to see it.

Doubts have been raised among some that the same EU could one day be ruled by the far-right. If that happened, then what would happen next? They hid it in their minds with fear. The changes are not about knocking on the door and getting permission. When a man is stunned with how it will ever come, a tsunami will hit them. Little did anyone know at the time that a tsunami in Europe was imminent.

One country's danger in Europe shook many continents during World War II. Because of this, the world bled profusely. Millions upon millions of innocent lives were lost. Today, the European Union is growing as one continent. How can anyone prevent it from one day endangering world peace? The world trembled when the day came to prove it.

This injustice not that happens only in Europe. It can take place in any part of the world. It happened to the Tamils who lived in Colombo, Sri Lanka. When they relocated them, an incident took place because they were unfit to live in Colombo as they were born Tamils in their own country. Must enhance the efficiency of a country's police or intelligence service to catch terrorists. It can be done to some extent by the West. If you hit, it must be a terrorist. In Sri Lanka, the misconception that Tamils are terrorists is soaking in the majority's blood. Due to a leg extension's unavailability when Dutugamunu is asleep, he hated Tamil that he thought they were taking his land; his thinking took thousands of Tamil lives after him. Although the Tamil race suffers in Sri Lanka today, the respective atrocities did not abate. Several breaches. Revenge continues.

On the seventh of June two thousand and seven, the Sri Lankan government detained them in Colombo and transferred them by bus to the Tamil area. Another deep historical scar will remain indelibly etched on the degenerate face of Sri Lanka. Buddhist sons do not care about scars. Our stupidity is to expect rights in a country where Tamils kill by them. Non-violence lost. Then the weapon came. Now Weapon is lost. What's next? What do Buddhists will give us? Persecution?

Countries that have lost humanity to war must be the ones that have lost face for a long time. They could not retrieve the German faces that the Nazis snatched. In the affected countries, the Germans burned down the houses, killed and raped the women. They see as demons. This sign is a common sign of all nations losing humanity.

Selfish politicians seeking short-term hastily political gain bury those facts and plant them for some time in their campaign. Graves will one day wake up. Then the ugly ones will leave in search of humanity.

France again forcibly repatriated the Gypsies to Romania and elsewhere in early January, two thousand eighteen. Even after Romania joined the European Union, the Gypsies are not counts by anyone, and them expellees from EU citizenship. The denial of that right was because they were born into a race called the Gypsies. It continued as an act of continuing to punish people who had historically punish for a long time. Doing it in France was a very disgusting reproach to Europeans' chest-thumping tradition.

These gypsy nomads migrated from the Indian state of Rajasthan to European countries beginning in the mid-Indies around six hundred BC. The Europeans saw them as untouchable low caste and kept them as slaves. These gypsies had to suffer many hardships, and they got the nickname as thieves and filthy. Sometimes evolution is even weirder. It is still strange to see those who left the same place a few thousand years ago treat those who came a few thousand years later from the same place as slaves and untouchables. That is what happened to white and black.

Italy, Spain, and Greece saw the deportation of gypsies by France, and they also forcibly deported them. Gypsies are born as nomads, and they do not like to live around the same place. The nomadic legs are restless. Does not agree to stay in one place.

The Gypsies had been forcibly deported, returned to Western Europe for some time. Gypsies' return angered the extremist government of France. They have not been able to stop the influx of refugees. And could not control the return of the Gypsies. The resulting hatred angered them.

That extremist right-wing government took over the area of Trabesson overnight and set up large detention camps there. Gypsies kept in camps set up like that. It created a horrible look when the new Holocaust arrived in France. Working or dying without food was avoided here until death. It brought relief to many Gypsies who trape in it. Only their freedom currently sacrifices. They did not as grossly sacrifice life and liberty as World War II gave them some relief. Infectious diseases spread as more people confining to one place. There were health problems, and they have to endure these inconveniences. It increased the number of deaths. Some people in the world were so mutated that they were happy about it. Doubts arose as to whether this was their indirect plan.

Setting up camps like this and stuffing people has become something accepted by the world. The arrival of the Secretary-General of the United Nations in the year two thousand and nine on the twenty-third day of April did not change Sri Lanka. That example gave much courage to the EU countries today. Suppose a developing country with no solid economic backbone can grab India's or Chania's dirty shirt of the backside, stand up to the world, and do what it wants. What should the world's most prosperous, and was one-time imperialism of many countries and was superpower be afraid of it? As they thought. That courage made them act fearlessly. Countries that began to do so initially wondered what to do about the refugee invasion, but then they recognized it.

If countries like Sri Lanka can keep their people in camps for some reason, why can't we? The opportunity soon arose for the Sri Lankan people to taste the medicine they had prepared for themselves.

The fact that India had become their neighbor unluckily was the Tamil people's unchangeable curse was repeatedly sought after by them. They force to sacrifice a second time.

There have been many changes in European countries' view with time and political instability, and the expected hustle and bustle there was gone. It brought so much relief to France. Refugees or Gypsies were the problems in one of the many EU countries. In some countries, they both caused significant issues. They were more concerned about fighting it and saving their socio-economic systems. It was clear to those politicians that asking the natives to leave their comforts to the settlers would not be profitable. This situation of struggle, in a way, seemed to agree with France's plan. It continued to bring great relief and reassurance to the French government. Realizing this change, countries such as Italy and Spain secretly locked the returning Gypsies in large detention camps.

The press's freedom in a country is always handcuffing to politicians' uncontrolled, inhumane, and selfish activities. Articles about the suffering of Gypsies often appeared in magazines and Newspapers. But the majority of people, who were skeptical and disgusted with them, refused to believe what the press was saying. They did not give importance to it. Some wanted to get rid of them.

Spain was the first country to ban cameras in portable devices to aggravate and destabilize young people. The frequent exposure of politicians' activities by such equipment contributes to this. Arguments made that videotaping the camps of Gypsies with such cameras and putting them on the internet would jeopardize the country's security. Following that, the country was the first to ban cameras in such equipment. Instead of protesting, the EU did not speak out at first. Then they followed Spain and began to restrict the use of cameras in such handheld devices. Spain next began exploring how to block Google's satellite imagery.

These changes took countries like the United States and Japan by surprise. The economy was vital to them and China; therefore, they stopped interfering on this and continued tactics like an escape and run away.

Demonstrations took place in some countries, with little knowledge of what was happening to the Gypsies. They repress severely by the police, intelligence services in the extremist state.

5.2 Gypsies in Rome

Nearly one hundred and fifty gypsies gathered for fun on the sixteenth day of the year, two thousand and twenty-five in Rome's suburbs, Italy's capital. It was a warm evening, and the wind rocked as the men and women danced. Many whole pigs grill there to eat. They have examined a lot more types of meat than that. They wanted to drink alcohol, drank it, and chewed snacks. The most discreet music pervaded there. They danced accordingly. The dance and music of the Gypsies are some of the most popular. They do not leave it at that. In their culture, marriage is not something that happens overnight. In their culture, marriage can happen to small children as well. It is said to be present in India as well. They live in a tight family with a wife who belongs to the social system's husband. The responsibility of caring for the family is the wife's first duty. Women take it as their social duty to have and raise more children.

In the intoxication of alcohol and the majesty of music, the dance moved towards its peak. Many began to cheer; The celebration weeds out with the same enthusiasm of women, men, boys, girls, and the elderly. Understand the instability of life today and not tomorrow and this moment is in the throes of being true, The urge to enjoy it rippled through them. Their dancing made them hungry and tired for a while. The hungry began to take the food they needed. Then there were two jeeps with Italians coming fast. The big, big tattoos on their bodies identified who they were. Some who saw this slowly began to retreat.

There were six people in one jeep and five in the other jeep. Their jeeps were coming fast. Those who had some understanding of what was in their hands rushed in and tried to hide. Some did not understand what was going on. Some danced without noticing they were coming. Those who have forgotten the current state of the world under the influence of alcohol continue to dance enthusiastically without today's worries. They looked at the people hiding in fear, laughed at that.

The reality descended into disarray. After a while, the bullets fired at the gypsies without mercy. It was then that the first sober music died. So disgusting voices erupted. The bodies of two of the instrumentalists fell to the ground.

The dancers, the food eaters, Children who played run and seek, Many women, before realized what stitches in the body; They fell to the ground as rooted trees. To see the end of lives with such a fading memory, the nightmares it produces will last as long as you live in this world. Dead pain with a pulse, last slap on the limbs, its peak pain, spurting blood at high speed., The body loses blood and becomes exhausted, body pulse that slowly goes to its end, struggling to let the last breath. The condition that occurs after the movement of the eye ends. The suffering of men who see what should not sees. Those happy moments turned into heartbreaking death knells in a few moments. Blood everywhere, The stain began to spread. The Nazis did not shoot and leave immediately. The Nazis came around in the jeep and fired as if they injure people for fun. So they drove their vehicles lightning-fast after hearing the police roar somewhere.

The place lost its joyous celebration and has plunged into battlefield shouting and sadness. Those who snatched their children, brother, sister, husband, wife, and parents, and those who saw them, wept bitterly. They could not understand why this was happening to them. Their mournful sound echoed everywhere. The sun was ashamed to know that immorality and sorrow could not bear to see the cruel human race. The sun became red with anger and disappeared into the cloud.

They must have heard the sounds of gunfire as far as the city. Someone has since given the information to the Emergency service, and police and ambulances rushed there. More ambulances, police, and helicopter ambulances arrived after the attack's brutality. Additional police cordoned off the area to prevent the journalist from approaching the scene.

The police were more focused on trying to save the far right. Far-right feared that the opposition would make this a massive campaign, and Far-right didn't want to see this happen under their rule. They asked the police to arrange for journalists not to exaggerate it. Some newspapers and television companies went beyond that and filmed using helicopters. They also broadcast it live. The police could not stop it any further.

Journalists detained near the scene waited to receive the news. It was untrue that only ten of those killed, as reported to reporters who had stopped at a distance. They refused to believe it. Ambulances arrived at the scene, Ambulances returning from the scene, Number of injured, all this in their count they sent a message that more than a hundred people might have died. Pictures taken from Heli soon became the source of the news.

Subsequent reports said the number given by the police was untrue. It also revealed that they were hiding the truth for some reason. Doing so would undermine the credibility of the existing freedom of information, and criticisms aroused a hazardous development against democracy.

Most of the criticism was against the police who stations at the scene. Journalists know that the police force into such an act. Journalists have been harshly critical of them for knowingly exposing the truth. In the end, police released information that eventually, sixty-four gypsies have killed, and thirty-six were injured, and they apologized for earlier reports that could not confirm. Journalists contacted hospitals.

Accordingly, the police finally acknowledged that the information was accurate and issued statements condemning the neo-Nazis and the current far-right government.

Massive demonstrations continued in many cities in Europe following the brutal killing of Gypsies. Those states predicted that these protesters would be more dangerous to their countries than the neo-Nazis. They unleashed more police violence on them to quell the protest. Many organizations in Italy continued to protest. The government of that country did not like it at all. It was busy trying to control this somehow. They were dazzled by excessive freedom of the press and permission to demonstrate. The far-right decided to ban demonstrations and censor social media and newspaper reports. They decided to tighten the rules first.

Changing those laws in the Italian parliament was not a problem. They didn't give up as well. They amended the law to give the police the power to detain and hold someone for more than two months without proceeding with them in court. This law came as a big shock to many media outlets. It also caused great shock and fear to the opposition, the left, and progressive organizations.

As usual, police reacted very strongly against those involved in the demonstration. Same time the media under severe censorship. The government believed that such restrictions were vital to being a stable government that would not jeopardize its security. The government discussed implementing it in its own country and all European countries. It covered up the problem posed by the neo-Nazis and emphasized the threat posed to the world by Islamic extremists and the strength needed to suppress it. It argued that it was possible to stop them by bringing in those laws and bringing peace to Europe and the other nations.

Although there was some opposition to such an idea at first in the EU, they were well aware of the blanket that would help suppress Islamic extremists. They also agreed that it would help them further tighten their countries' position.

The legislation was later passed by the European Parliament, making it valid for the entire EU. Also, it became valid for other EEA EFTA countries that collaborate with the EU differently.

Those who tried to protest against it knew firsthand what the law would taste like this. Nazis killed the concern over the slain gypsies is slowly being forgotten by the law's changes. These fierce protests ensued the mysteries that those who went to it never returned their relatives' continuing plight to where they got lost. The reality is that those who leave do not return home, which have newly imported to Europe from countries such as Sri Lanka and Latin America.

The United States, which has been spying on European countries, has objected for the first time. The EU does not take it for granted. Some have joked that this is nothing new to the United States. Then Asian, African, and Latin American countries condemned it. They stopped it with their condemnations. No one wants to negotiate economic transactions with the EU. The world is in a state of disregard for the accumulating economy rather than social justice and humanity. It was so strained.

5.3 Turkish in German

Most of Germany's immigrants are from Turkey. They came with power to Germany when there were united Ottoman Empires. Following the Ottoman Empires' fall, they no longer lived in Germany, and frequent visits ran their lives to and from the homeland. When World War II broke out, they returned to their land. They do not want to force to breathe toxic fumes when there is clean air in their home country. They immigrated to Germany for work in nineteen sixty-one, after World War II became history. Over time, they became the most significant minority in the country. Unlike the natives, they were of a lesser color and adhered to Islam's different religion, which prevented them from being accepted by many natives as also Germans.

Personal preference and dislike are different, but the law and its practice are indifferent to all. Three-point five million Turkish descent people lived in Germany in the year two thousand under the law's protection. In the days that followed, there were more and more violent attacks on Muslims and other races or people of color. Although a section of the disgruntled Turks returned to their homeland, the vast majority continued to live with Germany's struggle as other people of color.

The Berlin suburb of Kreuzberg was once known as Little Istanbul. Although many Turks lived there displaced due to rising house prices, many Turks still live there. According to their culture, wedding ceremonies are beautiful, luxurious, and exciting.

On the morning of the sixteenth of August, two thousand and twenty-five, six young Turkish men decorated the hall. At that moment, four approximately fourteen-year-old boys, dressed in shorts and shirts of the same color, came running and stood in front of the Turkish youth. They had cut the hair very short. They looked at the Turkish teens, shouting 'Heil Hitler' in a mocking manner, kicked them hard on the ground, and saluted them with Hitler Salute as if they saluted them real Hitler. The Turkish youth were blown away by the unexpected, and they stood frozen in shock.

The young men who scored the salute did not let their hands down. They just stared at the young Turkish men as if asking for permission. Turkish youth understand nothing. The question arose within them about whether they expected to be saluted in return. Do they expect that, and will we return such a salute? Wouldn't we instead cut off our hands? They continued to stagger in the flow of thought.

In it, a young Turkish man suddenly became angry. He ran to hit them. The other young men who saw it chased them along. They saw that Turkish chasing them, the NEO-NAZI youth fled. Laughter has come to the chased Turkish teens, and they came back and opened and decorated the hall. They forgot about the incident as a prank.

*

At seven o'clock that night, the Turkish wedding got a peak. The guests sang and danced and forgot the outside world's fear in the depths of happiness and indulged in pleasure. On Saturday. Rest day for many. The look of the hall, everyone who invited came to the ceremony. The wedding hall has filled with a crowd of guests. Men, women, children, and the elderly saw the public's tightness. Their speech, laughter, and angel-like adornment made it seem as if paradise had dragged down to earth.

The gift-giving event began according to the Turkish system. The bride waved her arms like a dancer, thanked them, and accepted the money, and The bridegroom also thanked them and took the money. The payers went as far as to give each money bill to both without discrimination.

Suddenly two jeeps and a lorry came speeding by and stopped in front of the wedding hall. The lorry driver stopped the truck and got out of the vehicle as if well aware of the entrance to the wedding hall blocked. They were all wearing masks. The tattoos on their bodies were well known. It showed the identity of them and who they were. But we must remember all tattooed people, not like them. Some Turkish youths standing outside did not understand what to do. They were stunned and stood motionless for a few moments.

The occupants of the jeep descended with petrol bombs and hammers. First, they threw three petrol bombs between the wedding hall door and the lorry. They then smashed the window panes with hammers and threw petrol bombs inside the hall. Some of the Turks standing outside tried to stop them, but they answered by hitting them with hammers and throwing more petrol bombs inside.

Then they took their other vehicles parked on the street and disappeared from the place at lightning speed. All of this was done as planned and have completed within a few moments. They have done before anyone there could guess what was going on. There were the same confusion and outcry everywhere. The materials in the hall and the materials that made up the hall structure are very flammable. They started to ignite very fast. The Turks' nylon clothes were flammable at the wedding, like pouring oil on the burning fire. The fire consumed the available fuel and made a horrible scene. It spread rapidly with speed when the end of the world arrived. It's even more irritating as it stretches its tongue towards the sky and the unquenchable desire to grow beyond the universe.

The scene of children, the elderly, women, and men fighting against the fire spread like an endless terrible tsunami. Some jumped through the windows when they understood the situation. There is a massive drag on who climbs the window and jumps out first. The lorry parked at the entrance prevented them from escaping a fire. Some Turkish youths standing outside reported to the fire brigade. They searched for the stones, broke the remaining glass, and struggled to get the humans out.

So they were able to save some of them. Many fainted from the smoke. Some were charred and struggled with the fire, and fainted. The fallen bodies laid there. The stench of a burning body pervaded the place. Some people vomited because they could not stand the smell. The stench shattered human control and spread to all four sides.

Firefighters, ambulances, and police arrived after Turkish youths fought the blaze for some time. The fire brigade quickly rescued the people and extinguished the fire. One hundred and ten Turks still died from poisoning and burns. Thirty-seven people are hospitalizing with severe burns. Twenty-six people went to the hospital for minor injuries. They tested some of the rest tested for smoking poison. The police contacted the journalist and explained the strict legal plans.

Police issued a stern order not to release footage showing any human beings in the videos due to media restrictions. They advised that all relevant footage be sent for censorship and released with their permission. Similarly, they strictly suggested that the media only publish the information they provide.

The tragedy was unbearable as there were more small children among the dead. The roar of parents who have lost their children shook the city. Many of the dead children died with burns, and the grief of not being able to bear it was excruciating. Their dress was one reason for that. That's how some women's clothing took their lives.

Tragically, the bride and groom burned to death as they hugged each other. The scene left a lasting impression on the Turkish people of the city.

The German media, which published the news the next day, did not say how many people had died or were injured. Not to be outdone, some were wounded or expire, and the cause of the burn has yet have determined. Seeing this news in the media, the Turkish people in the city boiled over. They took to the streets suddenly after the afternoon prayers that day to protest.

For taking part in the demonstration without permission, police stopped that rally and attacked blind whoever was with that demonstration. Angry Turkish youths attacked the police. They then dispersed, unable to withstand the police's fiercely planned counter-attack. They smashed vehicles in anger while running and set fire to buildings. The riot did not end there. It continued to be an incident of fire to cars, lorry, van, and property in the days that followed.

Puts fire on property angered the incumbent extremist German state. It gives police the power to fire on the spot if they see someone put fire on vehicles or put fire on a property.

Since then, several Turkish youths have been shot dead by police in the streets. Their bodies laid in the streets because of fear. Therefore they were sadly not being buried religiously. It caused great panic and anger among them. Moreover, they do not understand how to fight state terrorism. Some took advantage of the situation and led them into a holy war. Although it was taken lightly by most, some believed it. For that, some secretly left without telling their parents. The position of the Turks is like that misfortunes never come singly.

5.4 Deportation of Turks

Suddenly the far-right German government made an unexpected decision. Consequently, it decided to identify all Turks who were non-nationals living in Germany and deported them immediately. It arranged special train services for it.

When this became known to the Turkish community living in Germany, they engaged in fierce resistance. That far-right German government gave the police full power to carry out their duties. The police acted without any mercy in discharging their duty. It caused many human tragedies in the history of New Germany.

Thousands of Turks were arrested overnight in Kreuzberg. All Turks who lived without citizenship, from husband to wife, from wife to husband, from children to parents, or from parents to children, were arrested and locked up in a large stadium with strict security. The stadium has fenced with modern barbed wire several meters high. Instead of blocking the sharp thorn-like thorns in the fences, they shouted at them to come and commit suicide. They intend that such austerity should be a warning to other races.

They were then immediately sent to Turkey by trains already arranged. Police brutally shot and killed Turkish descend who are German citizens, and they fought back.

Blatantly obscured its actual numbers. Censorship is very supportive of that.

No matter what the censorship, in the age of telecommunications, no one can completely ban the exchange of messages. They Could not eliminate the cameras, and The news appeared on websites, on some homepages, on Twitter. The government subsequently cut off Internet links to suspects. They snatched cell phones. This kind of denial of human rights by the EU shocked the world, but they saw this as an observer who could do nothing. Memories of the dead people in history made many people giggle as they watched the present. No one could have imagined that once again. Although the idea of repeating was a source of frustration for many, it was understandable to many that it conceives.

Concerns about the economy rather than rights repeatedly have sunk many countries with no comfort. Despite their opposition, those countries were in the dilemma of resorting to the EU at some points.

The Turkish government refused to accept the deported Turks and detained them. The Turkish and Bulgarian people provided food and water for the people. The people of that country were outraged when the government did this. Large demonstrations followed on both sides.

The far-right German government refused to take them back by train. They did not want to show the flexibility of humanity in their decision. They declined with an unchanging conclusion. They thought only selfishly about their people. The idea that Germany would eventually become a Turkish state if returned the deported Turks returned was deeply ingrains in many far-right politicians.

The Turkish government was shocked to see the massive protests in Turkey. It feared that many European countries would take this as a lesson and opportunity to repatriate more people in the future if Germany deported them. They also provided foreign exchange for Turkey's economy and tourists visiting Turkey. They could not accept that would block cash flow.

Simultaneously, the Turkish government fell victim to the local people's protests by leaving the people in the middle of the border area. The Turkish government feared that they might lose their government and cause civil unrest.

The Turkish government urgently sent its top envoys to Germany to hold marathon talks. It's exhausting when nothing works. Then it realized that it had to defend its politics and changed its decision.

At the same time, tired people entered their country without asking anyone. The Turkish police remained silent on whether to shoot their people. The government was shocked by the police's action but did not take any action and remained silent. The German government saw it as an opportunity and arrested and deported more Turks. It dusted off the Nazi argument that population growth was the enemy of extensive habitat and critical resources. The first step was to expel the Turks from the country. Many European countries watched the play with intent and silence. They only thought about their own country.

Turkey had no choice but to accept its people into the country eventually. It counted on the economic burden that would ensue. The event brought great joy to all European countries. Many countries in the EU secretly rejoiced that a way had been born for themselves. Those governments subsequently developed secret plans.

Many countries have leveled harsh criticism at the EU at this time. INSTEAD, the EU issued a stern warning to those countries not to interfere in their internal affairs. It also pointed out that these criticisms would cause rifts in economic and political relations with the EU.

Many countries went as a snake on the box after hearing the word economy. Income, expenses, and the means they now have seemed important to them and simultaneously boiled down those countries that could not object to the people being the victims of injustice.

5.5 European cities became the central ghetto

In two thousand, some suburbs of London had been transformed into spontaneous 'ghettos' by expelling the natives. If you stand there in many suburbs, you will only see colored immigrants. Beyond that, if you see some whites, they are from Eastern Europe. They are temporary or permanent residents considering some facilities. More than that, you can find native married to people of color. Other natives have left the tree and become permanent migratory like birds. Why are these changes happening? Why did the government not have an analysis of how to stop it? Social divisions became entrenched in the frenzy of interfering with their freedom. London has developed into a metropolis with several independent 'ghettos' with multiculturalism without natives.

Standing in these suburbs gives the impression of standing in South Asian cities or African cities. This change was not limited to London and gradually affected many large European cities. Little by little, it transformed those cities. Those big 'ghettos' of freedom created lasting fear.

They created ghettos with the power of the Nazis in World War II. They are the 'ghettos' who have gripped human beings with starvation, left human beings in misery, and killed them, and historical scenes of naked dry human corpses stacked on the streets. The Jewish corpses were stacked on carts and dragged away by the Jews. What captures the horror of it all is the sad movement of individual skeletons with no muscle of their own to pull them into the cart. Without the state's intention or planning, this is the division rooted in man's fundamental, protectionist nature, skepticism about people of other races, cultures, religions, and lack of understanding and knowledge about them.

In a way, it is a historical series, a legend that has sprouted in buried suspicion; these spontaneous 'ghettos' have grown astonishingly all over Europe. These 'ghettos' without dumping later became permanent city and community structures.

Through it, the natives and the colored immigrants, who had fallen into the mire of hatred, fear, and ignorance, acted with an uncompromised desire to split into two poles. That change has now made many people think.

Most of the politicians in these countries were natives. Most of those politicians lived in affluent areas or outside the city where they were almost absent of colored immigrants. For them, this problem is not a neighborhood. Distant voices of mourning do not touch their ears. They did not respect this problem at the start. Instead, they focused only on the task of putting the issue under the carpet. They have failed to give due importance to the fact that this is causing a tremendous social change. Those politicians' failure to stop or divert that change later records a significant historical error. Even though they are beginning to realize it now, people are not currently listening to politicians' words on the subject. That change causes an irreversible change and vibration in society as if it were a wave produced from one point, abandoning its state of production, spreading in all four directions, and engulfing the entire watershed. Back to the starting point, it makes it impossible to pull.

Native people who left the big cities settled in small towns or villages. Far removed such settlements from the big cities. Their jobs will be miles away in the town. They needed to travel for it every day. Even so, to many, it may seem strange that discomfort they are willing to accept. Strangely, human hatred and ignorance prepare us to take any inconvenience.

Is being with colored humans the same as being with animals? Suppose science claims that man's first appearance took place on the African continent and that all humans worldwide spread from there. In that case, the arrival of later adaptation depending on their location now confirms. If genes are actual, bachelor's and beyond will not understand this tiny matter. What can they say about spending many hours of their time on a traveling train? That is the reality of Europe today.

For humans looking at colored immigrants and runaway, do they understand that Gandhi, Nelson Mandela, or Martin Luther King is also people of color? The world can admire the perfect human can come from people of color. Can they even imagine that giants hated by people like Hitler and Mussolini could appear in the white race? How foolish to look at a few human beings and evaluate society as a whole. When you are golden, will your quality deteriorate due to melting? If you do not believe in your character, then whose fault is it?

The natives who fled out of the city were not let go by the newcomers to the country. The natives soon realized that plight. Although many people of color did not settle in smaller towns, some people of color came to those small towns for business and other work. Such immigration was not a big problem initially; the communities ran smoothly. As if that peace is stoning, some extremists and neo-Nazis attacked the people of color living there.

Hate is like wild grass that dries up. It will remain grass until it catches fire. After getting fired, the grass will transform into a fiery tongue. The silence lasted there, knowingly or unknowingly, when the fuel was grace forward; that silence suddenly lost. The event that will happen here is a tsunami that has already developed. They don't care at all about the fact that no one can stop it when it rolls its way and gets enormous.

*

Nakulan has been running his grocery store very well profitable for a long time in the London suburbs of Kingston. Despite graduating as an engineer, the monotonous difficulty for job-seekers of color persisted. Color and name pushed them to the secondary choice of employers. Even if you get such a job, the paycheck will end before the last day of the month. Even if the husband gets the job, there is no guarantee that the wife will get the job.

The series of cultural impacts of Jaffna continues here and today. They will not agree to wash the cup and plate.

The idea is that the low caste people's work refuses to perish. They predict that the store will employ both of them and a handful of incomes. He also understood that it would be convenient for him to wander with the freedom of being an employer. The Tamil grocery store business is the way it invents. Refugees from Sri Lanka took over this self-employment. It is also a business that can start without excellent educational standards. Tamil shops sprang up in many places within the city of London. Then they turned their gaze to the other side when they could not breathe there. These small towns were what caught his eye then.

Business went well for Nakulan here. He also bought a house in that city. If anyone asks about the income, he will sing bad sang as usual. That is his paranoid nature. His children also went to school there.

When Nakulan came to lock up the shop after business that day, some people stood in the bus stand next to his shop and looked at him. Or so it seemed to him. These like-minded people in London can now and sometimes be seen here in the suburbs. It did not go down well with Nakulan. He is not much interested in history. The only thing he knew and liked was the account. The profit numbers it looked like were now prevalent. He had forgotten to predict the force and loads. He analyzed the profit and loss of the eyes that saw him standing at the bus stop today. With that analysis, he hurried towards the vehicle.

Nakulan was afraid that they would come and rob the shop when he locked it. He knew that people like these would sometimes go on a rampage and attack people of color. Fear arose in his mind that he might strike himself like that. Nakulan shuddered to see their images. Three of the four standing in it stood upright like trunkless elephants. Only one looked like Nakulan. Nakulan's choice was to flee if attacked.

Not only did they all get tattooed, but they also wore an earring, dressed like that their tattoo is visible and glamorous. That attraction caused a kind of fear and trembling to the colored inhabitants.

In green color, there was a symbol similar to that in the hand of God's Vinayagar called the swastika. He watched on TV that this is what Hitler used. He did not understand what that had to do with Swastika and Hitler. Nakulan never cared about the fact that the Aryan and its symbol do imports from the Himalayas. The first thing that occurred to him today was when he saw them eager to understand it.

When Nakulan looked into their eyes, it seemed to him that hid the beasts' anger looking for prey in it. He felt their eyes pierce Nakulan with arrows. He could not see them above it and turned his gaze towards the parking lot. Then he restless ran and walked to the parking lot. He drove the vehicle in a hurry and disappeared from the scene.

When he got home, Nakulan's wife gave him tea. He accepted it and drank that, and watched the news of the day on TV. He then researched the swastika on the internet. It had a description of it as a symbol of good luck. He did not understand it. He could not guess that luck had something to do with their vision. Their behavior will not bring any luck to them or their dependent society. He could not accept it. The question of whether this lucky symbol brought about World War II took him by surprise. 'Everything is comfortable if some take place that belongs them' He remembered Kannadasan song's lines.

When Swastika is in Pillayar's hands, that is a miraculous symbol of saving and caring for the world and giving devotees good fortune. But the story he had seen on TV, about how greedy it was when it went to the evil man's hand. His skull stiffened. He went on to eat without engaging in further research. Pillaiyar stands as stone without any change. His swastika does not give suffering to anyone in reality. But he did not want to be bothered that man's transformation into a killing machine happened in this real world.

After eating, he watched a Tamil show on TV with his wife. Temporarily dispelled the memory of the Nazis in that diversion.

Sulo's touch and hug made him feel like a drunk of Palmer's toddy. He forgot all his worries, and Kissing sounds came generously from them. Nakulan entered their bedroom with her meaningless or something meaningful laugh.

The following day, Nakulan went with a van to pick up supplies from a wholesale store called 'Cash and Carry.' So he asked Solo that morning about go to the shop and open it. Sulo knows that Kannan will accompany her. Opening a stand-alone shop here is not as risky as opening it within the City of London. Over time that security has now had undermine. That unstable feeling gripped her. The situation inside London will be much worse. Many people come to the store just to steal. You also need eyes in the back head to exclusively look at them rather than cameras. Those who work will beat in the shop, and the thief will stab himself, even if the employee sees the thief. It is a struggling business. It is also a sad fact that colored foreigners are the ones who do most of this work.

The Tamils thought that some country people, in particular, were the worst. Sulo did not know the truth of that claim. She usually believes it might be a mistake. Perhaps it is true that a few who have come from that part of the world undermine everyone's value. That is not representative of that part of the world. She also realized that finding those few was not an easy task too.

Asking that, Fear will swallow Sulo if any foreign men come to shop. That discomfort will shake the mind and body. Often they will be good human beings. Sometimes some people come to steal. Even if they take something and try to hide it, she will be scared to say that you took it. Despite being so scared, she got into a fight with someone standing at a reasonable distance one day. Then she was lucky; other men came to the store. When he saw them coming, he put the coin on the counter and ran away. The fear it caused to Sulo never went away.

Nakulan will say that this is what labor is all about. Sulo doesn't seem to have any choice. The game of mouse and cat is something that should continuously pursue everywhere and every time—a life of hatred and, at the same time, inseparability.

Some fire engines and firefighters finished work somewhere and headed back to their station on the way to the shop. She thought it was burning somewhere and thought it would burn even more in the winter. When she parked her car, she saw more people coming from the side of their shop. She also saw another fire engine standing there.

Unable to bear it, she ran towards the shop. Sulo saw the shop and was in severe shock. She was still on the ground with her head in her hands. The world has gone dark for her. Nobody does know how long she had forgotten herself like that. She regained consciousness only when Kannan said, 'Get up, sister; it was enough to be here. Get up from this place, sister.' She looked at Kannan and cried, 'Everything is over ... everything is over ... ' Said. 'Sister, come without crying. Come on in, take a look. ' Said Kannan. 'That's right,' she got up and went to the store with Kannan.

It completely burned the shop down. In case of fire, the information will come to Nakulan's mobile phone. Nakulan would have called her if that had happened. She could not believe that such a phone did not come. She went to the shop, stood for a while, and started crying again. She wept uncontrollably in agony. Kannan also tried to persuade her.

The police came towards her when they saw her crying. Then they looked at her and asked if the shop was yours. Sulo said 'yes' as she managed herself.

5.6 Turkey and Greece

The Greek government was in a hurry that day. The situation changed so that the chaos of the people in that country would overthrow the government. The European nations placed an unbearable burden on Greece's heads, a developing country bordering the EU, and EU countries closed their eyes comfortably. They showed blindness. Greece's face sighed horribly at the weight.

Whether to look at world legislation or to protect the domestic state was posed before the Greek government. The government was stunned, not knowing what to do. They did not anticipate this embarrassment so quickly. The idea was forward by a minister who realized that doing nothing alone could not save the state.

His simple idea was to load the refugees on white Red Cross buses and drop them off at the Turkish side's border town. It's an experiment. He went on to explain: 'Let's first look at what happens when they take refugees into the border. We will carry out the task of forcibly sending all the refugees if they allow it. We will stop records of refugees arriving, lock them in a camp, and immediately load them onto such buses. This time is only an attempt. Not sure if that will work. Without effort, we will not be able to continue to work hand in hand,' he added, explaining his simple plan.

'Will the Turkish government accept this? They will come to fight if we throw a small pebble across the border.' One objected, 'We will send refugees to their side bus after bus and see if they will accept it? or raise the battle flag?' The minister replied, 'This is not the time for us to have such philosophical discussions and pass the time. Let's give it a try. If it comes right, we are lucky. Or we'll find another way, or tell if you know a better way than this.' like this, he silenced most people there.

Some have suggested that 'refugees could be repatriated by air if the practice of sending by bus does not work.' Once again, someone commented that 'it would be very convenient if there were no record that they came into the country.'

'We need to know if the government can currently spend enough money on that matter to send it on by plane. Or there are cheaper ways to handle it if there is something else. Shipping will be cheaper. Can send special ships for this. The plan can implements if there is an artificial protein biscuit for the meal, water to drink, and some medical facilities. But those countries 'refusal to accept refugees will be a big problem.' Some people have an opinion like that.

'If their countrymen do not accept the people of that country, we will have to push the refugees out to sea and bring the ship back..' Angrily said a minister childishly. Later in history, it is believed that childishness has practiced in the deep seawater.

Thus, put several ideas forward to the Greek government's secret meeting. After much debate, They decided that the first step would be to implement a plan to send refugees on a white bus to Turkey.

*

That day, fifty unregistered refugees boarded a white bus. Then brought them to the border with armed guards. From there, unarmed guards sent the bus across the border. Turkish border guards unknowingly allowed the bus inside, believing it not to be a fake passport. The bus that went inside; drove to the nearest town after two hours of travel. They relieved all the refugees by force, returned travel documents taken from them, and finally went to Greece.

Within hours, the news reached the Turkish government. They sent hundreds of troops and military buses to the small town.

The refugees were given food and water by the Turkish army to rest. The following day they crossed the Greek border and brought them into Greece.

The Greek far-right government has reconvened. They explored what to do next in the wake of the white bus failure. They decided to repatriate the refugees to their home country by each country that came from it. They also agreed to provide them with adequate food, water, and some medical care. Everyone supported refugees' repatriation on such massive ships with the proper infrastructure. They hoped that sending refugees with basic amenities would reduce criticism from many. This project is a favorite of many. They considered it fair to send it like that.

Some have questioned whether it is possible to ship people who have been exposed to radiation and are sick. The answer to many is that they cannot send it like that. Some suggested that they could then send it on a plane. The Deputy Prime Minister again argued that he could not spend the money on them. Then he said to himself, 'I can give them a comfortable (Motsam) heaven.' He knows the Motsam, meaning not only Heaven but as the final release of everything.

Many were stunned by what he said. That meeting of the Greek government froze for a few moments. They did not expect these horrible words from the assistant prime minister all of a sudden, and many understand that the deputy prime minister is a far-right extremist. Many almost considered him a NEO-NAZI. Yet, it is still beyond the average person's reach to think like that.

He did not back down from his comment. 'The plan is to provide humanitarian assistance to the dying, as doctors do, and not to the poison gas killings of World War II. We are not going to do anything to those who are healthy living without great suffering.' Argued that. Then he realized the situation and rushed away and managed himself. The fact is that his claim shocked the far-right too.

However, it continued to argue. When time passed, the prime minister got more support for his opinion. They said his plan could rename 'Gates of Motsam.' Prime Minister vehemently opposed it. Be adamant insisted that he could not carry out any such project as long as he was in office.

Suddenly the Deputy Prime Minister 'Has to do this for the country's good. If you disagree with it, you can give your position to someone. We do not know any other way to save the country from going out of control. Please do not take this as an opinion against you. I think only for the good of the country.' said. Many applauded for it. The Prime Minister blushed in anger and came to the heat from cheeks. His cheeks and eyes were saffron red.

He was furious and said, 'I can not support this sin at all. I even hate that I don't like to have a drop in this sin. I am ashamed to think that I have formed a government with such ugly-minded people. I can not leave this country on the path of destruction. Only then can you free me from office by convening a general meeting of the party. I want to know what your opinion is on the General Assembly. Can only give a country the responsibility to those who the people elect.' He said in a stern tone.

The assistant prime minister did not like it at all. 'Don't you understand that you don't have a majority anywhere now? Take it to the party if you have the majority here first. Otherwise, respectfully leave the party and your position now. You may have appointed the cabinet. However, the party has representation in the cabinet now.

What is reflects here will be reflected in the party general assembly. That would be the opinion of the people.' Growled. 'It's like forcing me out of office. Do you understand the punishment for such a revolution?' Said the Prime Minister in a threatening tone. 'We have no use talking to him anymore. Stop your bugbear work now. We will hurry up the party meeting. Only then will he understand what world he is in.' 'No ... why should the Prime Minister be afraid? Let's put the referendum here first. Then we will deliberately join the party.' Said a minister. He follows by a referendum against the will of the Prime Minister. There were many voices in support of that minister.

Prime Minister lost the confidence of the ministers. He reluctantly signed his resignation letter after the referendum. At the request of many, the Deputy Prime Minister accepted the post. He convened a press conference shortly. It announces that the Prime Minister had resigned immediately due to family matters and that the Assistant Prime Minister would take over as Prime Minister. It is in the party's interest to decide whether to issue such a statement. Although the Prime Minister could not accept it, he remained silent and did not speak against that to keep his peace.

The Prime Minister left shortly afterward in a state of political turmoil. He enjoyed the relief of escaping great sin. He felt and wished to leave the country soon.

The news began to spread like wildfire. Many journalists were naturally skeptical of the decision. They were eager to know the mystery of the Prime Minister's resignation so hastily. Within hours, the new prime minister addressed the nation. In it, he promised to eliminate the refugee problem and bring the country back to normalcy within a year.

People refused to believe it. Like all politicians, he thinks to be just making promises. Political journalists and some people believed that there must be some conspiracy behind this change caused by the hardline Deputy Prime Minister. If anything like that, they expected it to come out very soon. Despite the speculation, many were left speechless. The fact that governments are not always reluctant to resort to violence has robbed people of their freedom of speech. Moreover, the EU and its members tightened the laws. They snatched away the voice of democracy and carried out a silent dictatorship in the name of democracy.

5.7 New Prime Minister

In Greece, the old prime minister's cabinet was changed upside down when the new prime minister took office. He slowly marginalized alternative thinkers, Democrats, humanitarians, and the senior prime minister's supporters. Instead, he brought in his unbelieving believers. He planned a leftist party that was a problem for them and put them in a false case soon after coming to power. He then banned the leftist party from the majority he had in parliament. He arrested and imprisoned essential people. He reduced other parties' strength by infiltration and increased his position's power. Fear and dictatorship silenced all voices. That silence against injustice became the compost of dictatorship.

Within three months, they lost democracy, and the country buries completely under a dictatorial regime. The far-right prime minister then embarked on a program of how to root out the root causes of the problem.

They made arrangements to repatriate those held in refugee detention camps on five large ships. Some facilities were made for it, as the Cabinet had said. Those in the camps were forcibly brought in and loaded onto ships. The police severely beat those who refused to cooperate. No media outlets were allowed to collect or publish the news without censorship.

Separate ships prepare from Europe to Asia, Africa, and the Middle East. They planned to send thousands of people aboard those ships. Reduce the world's condemnation against their action; they made some arrangements to show that they had acted humanely. Also sent a medical team aboard to help the refugees. They have made security arrangements to prevent any revolt or riot inside the ships. They provided all facilities and regular meals to the crew on board. They provided refugees with limited facilities, artificial protein biscuits, and drinking water. Those refugees have to rely on the rain to bathe. They never imagined that their European fantasies could end up in concentration camps and uncomfortable cruises. Now that they are left alive, they have to find peace in mind. It was more painful for the refugees to return to their homeland as beggars than before they left their land. They now understand that the value of life is above all else. After the death of Gandhism, if the Gandhi nation had not started a war; They thought that they would not have to leave their paradise in a hurry. Now that Paradise makes hell, it is their destiny to live in that hell.

At the same time, the Prime Minister called on some of Greece's best engineers, professionals, and a wide variety of physicians to discuss the matter in secret, day and night. He was very concerned that he would not know the outside world's issue. He also planned in his mind to show death to the builders after the building completes.

Budhham saranam gachhami,
Dhammam saranam gachhami,
Sangham saranam gachhami.

I take refuge in Budha,
I take refuge in the dharma,
I take refuge in the sangha.

In this new age, the Buddha's eyes' perpetual blood is shedding as tears. The technology that came last in the world should use there. There will be facilities for those who come in but not just facilities to communicate outside. With a pleasant feeling, visitors should go inside. They should not have any thoughts or fear of what will happen. To that extent, the interior should seduce them. He subtly corrected the mistakes left in history. He kept humanity in it alone.

Those who come should be warmly welcomed by those employed there. People of color should then be allowed inside after testing the instrument to identify standard metal, ammunition, telecommunications equipment, etc. The metals fitted to the hall are very different. First used them only here in world architecture. That great metal can withstand high temperatures for a long time. Other common metals do not withstand the heat and will melt in that process. Therefore, the rule must be strictly adhered not to compromise the hall's functioning. The Prime Minister wanted it to be a challenge to NASA by technology. They have used much different technology with heat sealing too. It may also have to bring Muslim extremists there. Doing so could be a suicide attack and can cause some damage to the building. This 'scanning' will be very convenient to control everything from the beginning. Same time, sniffer dogs also will be used without frightening humans. All communication devices will be acquired, and a fake receipt will be issued to prevent such news from going out.

Snacks and refreshments will provide to those who enter after completing the test. Movies of joking make stomach ache by laughter displayed until everyone arrives at the hall. A thrilling film begins after everyone arrives.

People will start paying attention to it.

Five minutes after the film starts, the employees leave the hall. Then the doors will automatically but silently shut. The closed system will begin functioning immediately. Ventilation to the arena and its surroundings will be closed. Then slowly spread the odorless anesthetic throughout the hall into the air they breathe. That must be sprayed very evenly throughout special ventilation inside the gallery. It executes it so subtly that no one realizes it. They will observe its movement observantly from the control room. To that extent, they used technology there. Toxins will slowly fill the hall liberally as people inhale the anesthetic faint. Fainting humans breathe it in and leave thousands of lives quiet without any pain, noise, tingling, pulse, or fear. First of all, the Greek Prime Minister described it as a classic plan to save lives in the most humane way possible. Prime Minister has no plans to kill people of color horribly. It was something he did not like at all. Prime Minister still does not understand why they did that way. He considered it an excellent center planned to help every color people not need to live in this country, pass out without any pain.

After being filled with poisonous gas and taking thousands of people's lives, new types of walls will cover all parts of the hall. Different metal sheets and heat sealing used to make the wall. Only the Prime Minister and those close to him know where the metal came from it. As the chairs continue to fold and go down to the ground, only the corpses are secured above. The bodies then lifted, and again special metal plates subtly cover the earth, ridge, and surrounding areas. Then the elevators will sink and go into the ground and disappear. The corpses now lie on a unique metal base overheat sealing. With the help of new technology, it will look like a big oven. Then with extreme heat, it burns itself. In that intense heat, all human beings dehydrated in a matter of minutes. When the funeral is over, cooling the hall will begin first. Then the self-cleaning task will begin.

First, the machines there clean the interior and remove the ash and dust. The first heat-insulating metal wall is then inhaled and followed by the second wall for insulation.

After that, the floor, sidewalls, chairs, doors, and screens come back up and take their place. Then the perfumes are sprayed. After that, it will be ready to continue its work as a newly built theater again. The prime minister's goal is to set up a state-of-the-art assassination factory with high technology and beauty to do the job without any problems. They carried out the construction work at the behest of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister was cautious not to make a mistake in history that was done by some before.

Following the first voyage's success, the Greeks quickly repatriated colored immigrants to their homeland. I was very proud that his effort paid off. It began to arrest overnight and deport those who did not have refugee status. It was well-received by the people of the country. Seeing this, the government revoked the status of refugees and their visas. It prevents the government from taking any legal action while doing so. It enacted a law depriving colored citizens of their citizenship quickly. The majority of the people also expressed their support for it. They were then deported back to their home country by the Greek government.

Attempts to send colored peoples by train not victorious, and many who send by ship also not victorious. When that was impossible, they stuffed colored peoples in detention camps. They then sent them to the Prime Minister's Humanitarian Death Center, known as the 'Gates of Motsam.'

The success of the Greek effort encouraged other nations as well. They also began shipping unsolicited immigrants to many countries by ship. Countries already living in poverty are facing a new problem. Without worrying about it, the far-right governments quickly deported refugees from Europe.

Like Greece, many countries have mercilessly stripped refugees of their citizenship and repatriated forgotten lands as their homeland. The children of many refugees may have lived in a European country as their homeland as their whole life, but suddenly to an Asian country or an African country, they send back to as their homeland. They could not accept it.

European countries do not see this as a violation of human rights and have set an example for themselves. Simultaneously, some African-Asian countries rejected those who had lived in Greece for a long time and sent them back to those European countries by air. European nations imprisoned returnees who did not understand the injustice they were committing. For those who disagree with anyone, the final decision is through the 'Gates of Motsam' given by the government.

6.1 UN Deactivation

At the United Nations, the most impoverished nations were complained about the refugee problem breaking the law by member countries. Following this, many European Union countries decided to boycott the United Nations and declared that its decisions would no longer bind them. Following the announcement, Russia and Japan, already embroiled in controversy, suspended their participation entirely.

That act also angered the United States that already warned many times to stop, which stopped its contribution to what it needed to do to run the UN. Following that, the United Nations came to a standstill due to a lack of funds to operate. The EU gradually withdrew from the dysfunctional system because it was of no use. Many countries that saw it pull out one by one.

The United Nations' inaction has paved the way for countries involved in human rights abuses to act freely. The world has become a classroom out of control because no teacher was present. It helped those who felt that the refugee problem affected their country's ethnic balance to take drastic action against those refugees.

If the United States or Japan condemns it, it will not take seriously. Criticisms of the CIA's human rights abuses in the United States raises against it. Refugees from neighboring countries to the United States are a significant problem, and they found keeping silent about refugees helps them. Also, the United States and Japan have become accustomed to suppressing as much of their criticism as possible, believing that their trade should not be affected.

In the aftermath of the UN failure, it seemed impossible to provide proper assistance to the country facing the catastrophe when the world's greatest tragedies occurred. At that time, the big countries were doing limited help to those countries only through their aid organizations.

After the UN's fall abolished the system of punishing criminal nations entirely, the International Court of Justice in The Hague dissolve. International Court dissolving paved the way for EU countries to address refugees who arrived in Europe after the Indo-Pakistani war and those who came before. Those countries declared that they no longer needed to abide by the Geneva Convention with the UN's fall.

The first attacks were on Indians living in Australia. There was a lot of contact between the attackers and the far-right, who later claimed responsibility for the Australian government. They do not want to show any kindness to the colored immigrants. They also hated the arrival of large numbers of ships with colored immigrants from Asia. Some of them thought the racist way that such people would make their country ugly.

Meanwhile, Australia arrested refugees and imprisoned them on several islands, refusing to release them as usual. It completely ignored humanity. Since the extreme right was in power in most countries, they quickly achieved what they set out to do by law. Many were afraid to go to Australia after this change. The people who robbed indigenous countries without any guilt then prevented someone from coming there and imprisoned them, continuing for a long time in Australia. The world today is not like it was in the past.

The fellow man is not ready to understand it and share it with the other human. The man who had the grace to communicate even in a dream was gone very far away. People living in developing countries do not have enough resources. Exploiting multinational corporations were waiting to use their poverty to ruin their lives. Corruption of government officials as their primary occupation continued. The multinational corporations of rich countries continued to exploit poverty for profit. They shamelessly bribed those in power and exported the profits to the West. The national corporations also boasted that they were not slackers.

6.2 Atrocities in Greece

The Greek government convened a secret meeting that day. The Prime Minister hastily called the meeting to announce his plan to make full use of the 'Gates of Motsam' center, which had been beautifully built, tested with five colored immigrants, and succeeded in the experiment. The Greek Prime Minister does not need to carry out his plans after encountered any such information, and it announces what it is about it. They have already given him, really, even more power. However, he continued to do, because of respect.

The Authority of those currently in power in Europe expanded enormously that never done before in Europe. They could remake man to women and women to man, just as the President of Sri Lanka, Jayewardene, told that only he couldn't do within his power. In their hands, the rule of who would live and who would die handed over to entirely. The politicians who could determine other human beings' destiny acted without the slightest hesitation to show mercy to other humans, but evil beings make that advantage for themselves.

The Prime Minister who came to the meeting that day wandered around frantically. In a little while, his mental struggle was over. It became clear that his action was not wrong.

Then, he said that he would show the movie's first show to three thousand people in a few days. He is not currently feeling guilty. He nodded his head without any worry, and his courage shone. Everyone there understood what the term Prime Minister's portrayal meant. It gave birth to a kind of sudden silence there. No one dared to object, even though they understood what the words meant. They were in profound silence. It only brought some discomfort to a few people.

Although they realized that many of the historical criminals had no history of escape, they dared to say that Europe and the world would not be able to imprison themselves as criminals for centuries because of the change in Europe now. Even with these colored immigrants' extinction from European soil, the Gypsies and Jews continually extinct European soil. It will take many more years. No one currently dares to oppose a giant like European Union. For this, they neglected to worry unnecessarily.

Although the situation would change abruptly, the Greek government immediately made sure that people changed their identity and lived elsewhere. It secretly gave every one of those closest to the government another identity unknown to others. It plans to move to that particular place with that identity at the moment of danger. It gave them more courage. The courage to say that no one can do anything for themselves showed arrogant behavior.

That the Prime Minister told, we have no choice. Still, we show the movie to colored immigrants, and he explained that it reduced the number of colored immigrants amount, would preserve their economy and culture.

They would be able to retain their identity as Greeks. He explained that with the implementation of this plan in Greece but throughout the EU, the EU would achieve complete purity. His feelings or words refused to reflect that he had a stab of conscience about the cruelty he was about to commit.

He said that even the harm done to humanity is very typical. For some, it came as a surprise. However, those who shout their mouths for the sake of existence forgot that the world was watching them.

In that hall, many agreed. Many continued to fast in fear and silence. The name of Politicians is what suits them. The dictatorship continued in silence without objection. It would artificially take three thousand lives away In a few days; some were disturbed by that. The fact that it was contrary to their religious beliefs makes them uneasy. However, they do not know that there are many other ways to solve it. Good Jesus Holy spirit lost to selfish people. Satan was ready to feast.

*

That day, three of the special train compartment brought the passenger to the arena. They have no idea what they pick up for it. Those compartments were the same as regular train compartments. All were able to travel without significant inconveniences. In those rails, sections have seats only to sit passengers. On the way, the Greeks treated them with the utmost humanity. Their trip ended in three hours. They did not bring any of their belongings, and they said it was unnecessary. Everyone in the camp picks up. Some patients escaped because they could not travel by train. They said they would show the movie only after people got in the train compartment.

They said they would bring them back to camp when the film was over. However, the extreme security alone made some people skeptical of what they were saying and what is going really. Then the smoothness of the journey slowly dispelled that doubt.

The crowd of passengers waved, not knowing that their lives were going to an end. They were amazed when they saw the theater where they would see the film. They had never seen such a modern, large-scale theater. Its grandeur and modernity drove away all doubts. Instead, they were mesmerized by the fact that their treatment was the opposite of their treatment at the camp.

Many could not understand why this tremendous modern theater built in a hilly forest.

Many fell off the train and ran towards the theater. No wonder they were one kind of man who would marry beautiful devils. In their haste and curiosity, the thing that should have happened only inside did want to happen outside too, and the guards hastily organized them and ordered them to go quiet.

Abdul Kadhar, his wife, and his son arrived on the train. Also present were two men from the Sri Lankan army, their wives, and their children. They were the leading soldiers in the Vanni war. Even then, murders were committed to saving humanity. The militants were disarmed, stripped naked, raped, and murdered to death. At the time, it seemed to be the right thing to do for the Sri Lankan military. This time seems right to Greek politicians today to do this.

Abdul Kadhar could not comprehend the theater and the purpose for which they take to it. Unable to do anything, he came down with his wife and child. He suddenly remembered the Sri Lankan International Airport. That, too, was then newly built and glittered. Again recognized the interior design of the plane arrival and departure area. It looked like marble from heaven at the time, no less than European airports. As he passed it, he thought his death was far away. He believed that even if it came like that, it would not come by man. It seemed to him that this theater was a thousand times brighter than the airport. The question arose again as to whether it was true.

The moments he enjoyed that day from Kattankudy to Colombo until he boarded the plane were very unpleasant. He still felt the pain of those awkward moments for no reason. Abdul Kadhar never dreamed that the attack would change the world so much that day. It pained him to think of how great destruction it has brought to the world today. He now understood that he had committed a great sin. He did not know whether Allah would forgive his sin. He stood there for a while, watching the people going to the theater.

Only when his son, who could not bear it, was dragged inside to come in that he became agitated. The Sinhalese children who came behind also ran eagerly towards Abdul Kadhar's children's theater. When another Tamil voice said 'Daddy, we will go too' and asked behind it, 'Allah! Do you have any forgiveness for me?' Abdul Kadhar murmured to himself that he could not bear to think of anything.

The Greek government has issued a stern order that all refugee property in the country should be classified and destroyed immediately. They were well aware that they should leave no trace of any part of the country and be a historic mistake. Accordingly, all the possessions were taken to a specially set up place, sorted, and then recyclable. They were cautious in destroying the remnants.

6.3 Murder hysteria

The arrival of refugees to Greece and Europe has ceased since the Greek ship began to repatriate refugees. Many refugees from developing countries to Greece lost contact with their homeland. Relatives who lived in the motherland thought of their relations living in Europe and uneasy. They were stunned not to understand what had happened to them. They did not communicate and why there was no response from them became a frightening mystery. The fear of whether they were alive or not, And what happened to them over time? Are they alive? So why not contact them? The fear put in them in worry and panic unbearable. It reminded those who now live in Sri Lanka about the past. Always there was no contact with such missing persons in Sri Lanka in the past. The fate of those who go missing in Sri Lanka will always be tragic, with unbearable pain and without a single bone found to perform rituals. No matter where you show your ID card and fall on your feet and ask, that decision will not change for Tamil. The question of whether such a fate would befall them also froze the blood of those relatives.

Many relatives contacted the Greek government through the Sri Lankan government and tried to inquire about their relatives. The Sri Lankan people got a historically familiar answer that no one by that name was there then. They were shocked to learn it again.

The news spread like wildfire across Asian and African countries. Traveling to Europe has become like traveling to a country ruled by Idi Amin. That's when a video came out in the media. It was taken in Greece using an old cell phone. It showed a large cinema theater, and the message was that the cinema theater was like the holocaust of World War II.

There were many thousands of colored immigrants from Greece in that video. They also described people murdered there. Many at first could not believe it. Those who went to Greece and recently returned to the country thought it first. There was no information from many who went to Greece not gave any sign to live made many people suspect. This situation caused many people to want to make sure the story is true and live.

The United States, despite facing a severe crisis and threat from the far-right in its own country, still retains its rule over them. It demanded an immediate inquiry into Greece and allowed itself to see the building.

The EU strongly condemned the move, saying it would investigate the matter alone and that no one should interfere in the EU's internal affairs. After that, the United States remained quiet as usual.

The issue began to spread through the Internet in the European Union. They were copied on 'SD' cards and distributed to many. Colored immigrants and some natives who witnessed this were involved in the protest. EU countries have strongly urged the police to crack down on it. Accordingly, the police acted very harshly.

In Greece, not only did the police act harshly, but they also arrested colored immigrants and locked them in camps. The government has already permitted the police to detain such persons illegally. First, collect the names of those who had been so imprisoned and remove them from the Greek records. Drawn from such records have since lost almost all evidence of their existence in this world. While not erase all traces of them, the government also succeeded in destroying their traces as much as possible.

After that, the Greek government did not want to keep and feed such people. They implemented a filming program for them as well. It also used an army to help the police stop and show the movie. Such prisoners had to see a film with plastic handcuffs too.

The Greek people were terrified of the permanent disappearance of the arrested colored immigrants and those dangerous to the regime. After that, they were afraid to open their mouths against the state. They made silence their new language. It was to give more courage to the Greek state that they began to search and arrest more colored immigrants and send them to show the movie.

Greek government figures show that the unemployment rate in Greece is suddenly declining. They propagated that it was a benefit from the cleverness of their state. It covered up the temporary job opportunities that came with the disappearance of the millions of colored immigrants who could work. Although the Greek government employed many of the natives, it could not prevent a decline in its gross income. The Greek government ultimately snatched away media freedom to not take them to the people. Then it tightened its grip on the people.

As the number of colored immigrants in Greece dwindled, so did the military presence on the streets. It created a kind of fear in the minds of the people of that country. The planned extermination of Greece's colored immigrants was a silent victory. It continued to cut off more Internet connections to prevent information from leaked and confiscated portable devices. Existing Internet connections are also subject to severe censorship and regulation.

The ban closed the country as a firewall that would not reveal. It overshadowed its death factory from spy satellites and spent lots of money on that and all work done at night there in the death factory.

Many foreign ministers from EU countries secretly visited Greece and marveled at its change. Greece carried out its plan without listening to the views of the world. Thus many European nations acted against the colored immigrant peoples and their children. They also found success in it. Greece is not afraid to use the plan against anyone now. It was the leading country in it. Greece is slowly emerging as a white nation.

In some countries, at the North Pole, a problem has always been smoking between Sami and most native people. Many far-rightists felt that the Sami people in the north of the country gives more rights than they deserve.

It is also true that a few of the 'Sami' hate colored people. Even it's not a general problem, and some even ridiculed people of color when they were in their area. At the height of the hatred, there was no limit to which side the knife ran from to which side, and at last, it follows blindly. The racists' opinion, who faced the hatred of some 'Sami people,' was different. They considered the natives to be many times better for them. Lack of knowledge about the other person is the number one reason for hatred towards others. At the same time, it understood that it was not the only reason.

The refugees, who have so far entered the EU, were sent back to where they first landed. The EU countries are currently busy doing just that. Greece solved it to some extent through its plan. Slanderous news about Greece spread throughout the world.

The idea that other European countries were sending refugees to Greece also spread worldwide. Scenes of refugees being loaded onto ships and then left behind in their home country still televise. It created unrelenting hatred of Greece and other European nations around the world.

6.4 Sweden

Greece was uprooted and became a country with only homogeneous natives. Sweden's far-right prime minister, who visited Athens to examine the situation, was surprised. Even Sweden is a remote corner of the world, but that has not purity like in Greece. He longed for their country to become like Greece. He is aware that the situation is improving as refugees' flow to their country is hampered. Yet his long-held desire was to build an end to the continued harassment of immigrants.

'Children of refugees return to their parents' homeland and then return as Islamic extremists to Sweden. Or they go to places where Islamic extremists fight and return to Sweden as dangerous extremists. Those who came like that explode in Sweden as human bombs. Or go to another country and exploding there. If there is a problem, they go down the street, set fire to vehicles, smashing property, and shout and burn whatever they found. Many cities have been paralyzed for days by such violence.' He Thought. Gothenburg once recalled what happened. He boiled inside. It does not appeal to that far-right prime minister. 'Muslims and colored immigrants should not be given the freedom to do whatever they want just because they were born in our country. Those who do not respect the law mercilessly expels from the country,' he thought. His long-held desire was to find a permanent solution to this problem. Sweden's far-right prime minister is overwhelmed by the sight of Greece.

Greece gave Occult, Aristotle, Hippocrates, Bethocross, Gomer, Socrates, El Craigo, and more great knowledgeable genius to the world. He was also pleased to see Greece again demonstrating how to solve the current refugee problem in Europe. When he saw Athens, Greece's capital, he had an insatiable desire to have such purity in Sweden. Sweden's far-right prime minister has reluctantly acknowledged that they still have to learn from Greece.

'If these changes happen in Stockholm and Gothenburg, the people of Sweden will allow me to be the Prime Minister of Sweden for a thousand years,' he thought. 'Left and right have distorted our country very well. All devil races in the world can be allowed into the country and even forgiven for spoiling its purity. But he was angry at the idea of taking Muslims into the country and forgiving the treason that had made our country Islamized.' Everywhere you see today, that hateable Muslim Mosque, like a primitive cultured human, covered all face of women, like faceless people changing our culture and identity and our country's face.' He boiled of thinking about this.

'Fortunately, people have seen this cultural devastation on time and have given us the position. They must have understood that only we can quiet the Islamists. We must suppress the tide of Islam and liberate the country from the occupation of colored immigrants and clean it up. Who else would do such a thing properly?' And so he thought to himself.

'The purity of today's Athens must come to our big cities in a while. Don't be afraid to give our lives for it.' He decided.

The Greek prime minister initially refused to tell the Swedish prime minister how they had cleansed the country. But the Swedish prime minister spoke to him with the insistence that he would not let it go unnoticed. He became acquainted with the Greek Prime Minister as a very close friend of the Prime Minister.

The Swedish Prime Minister said that he shows the building on YouTube and wanted to make Sweden look like Greece and asked how they could be reluctant to help each other even though they were all far-right—following that, he thought to announce the Greek Prime Minister slowly his plans. Then he changed it and first took him to that secret place and intended to show him its structure.

Although Sweden has long been a large industrialized country, the theater was a source of great amazement to the Swedish Prime Minister.

He openly admitted it. That made the Greek Prime Minister jumped in happiness. The Swedish Prime Minister is the head of a large industrialized nation who saw his technology and was surprised by it, kicking the Greek Prime Minister.

The Swedish Prime Minister listened first, then to the Greek Prime Minister; he said, 'If your country accepts a colored immigrant from our country, we will give you a five thousand euros; Can you accept that task?' word fold suddenly.

The Greek prime minister did not expect such a question from the Swedish prime minister. For him, it created an unanswerable embarrassment. He opined that it would not be convenient for them to accept and exterminate the colored immigrants from another country before exterminate the remaining Jews and Gypsies in Greece. The Prime Minister of Sweden asked, 'Can't you use that money to improve your economy?' He wished that. Suddenly the Greek prime minister prepared to negotiate, saying, 'That's not enough.'

The Swedish Prime Minister wanted to use the opportunity to ask, 'Then what do you want?' The Greek prime minister said, 'We can only help if you give us ten thousand euros to take charge of one of them and also the money to build a new theater to clean them up.'

It was as if the Prime Minister of Sweden had to sign the agreement immediately. However, in a statement, he said he would talk to his government and send his foreign minister to write the secret deal if they agreed. Then Swedish Prime Minister enjoyed touring Athens several times. Satisfied, he returned to his homeland.

*

The secret meeting took place in the prime minister of Sweden's office. It also attends by crucial military personnel. Before the meeting, the prime minister had invited the military personnel, gave them a sumptuous banquet, told them his plan, and obtained their approval. In this meeting, they showed their face for the ritual.

The Prime Minister of Sweden described the first thing he saw in Athens in detail. He then said that we should transform our city like Athens and that he had talked to the Greek prime minister about it and immediately sent a foreign minister there to write an agreement.

There was an incredible agony of what they could hear and see for many. Sweden remained neutral during World War II and is still proud to be the country that gave refuge to asylum seekers who fled from the Nazis. Today the situation has changed as if it was turning it upside down. Deciding what to do and what is right becomes a bit of a hassle. The idea that colored immigrants, their religions, and cultural values destroyed their culture, religion, and its very existence prevailed over those on the far-right. It gave them the impression that whatever they did against it was worth it now.

After a while, the Prime Minister was quietly thinking of something. Suddenly again, the man who releases from that silence said, 'we have to do something more important than that. 'That is, I have the full power to do such important things, and the right to report to the media belongs only to those in government. Or they can post the comments they like. We need to prevent that from happening. For that, we intend to abolish the office of king and get all power temporarily.' said.

No one expected this. Everyone just froze. No one wants to say anything against it. Party members remained silent, realizing that it would endanger their position and put their lives in jeopardy in the future.

The Prime Minister continued to speak. 'We are going to send the royal family safely to another place where they will place under house arrest with all facilities. This work will inevitably continue until the country is clean and tidy. Although I am sad about it, I have to do this with no other option, considering that the country should be in someone's hands for some time.

I hope everyone understands this well. And I hope your cooperation will continue.' said. Then some applauded. Many were speechless. It was disturbing to many to see firsthand the direction of the whirlwind of politics. The question of whether this diversionary wind would one day blow us away was lurking there with the veil.

Within days, the military presence in Sweden was all over the country. Some wondered where so many soldiers had invaded. The royal family relocates somewhere far away from the palace. Video footage shows them being healthy even though they did not know where they were.

Under the prime minister's direct supervision, they converted many large cargo planes to carry passengers. They made sure that its facilities not torture. They quickly changed the aircraft's configuration, loaded it with colored immigrants, and prepared to ship it to Greece. As a result, one thousand two hundred colored immigrant prisoners first airlift to Greece. That effort was successful. Following the deportation of the colored immigrant prisoners, they set out to find the first colored immigrant hiding in the country without permission.

Upon learning of this, some fled to neighboring lands. This time no neighbor showed them mercy. The colored immigrant immediately arrested and deported them to the country of origin. They also hurriedly tried to make a deal with Greece. Greece was at first reluctant to take on more colored immigrants. Then Greece refused to comply with it.

Following that, many European countries with such intentions secretly set up large death factories in their own countries or neighbors. They know that doing so is a denial of humanity. Respect for it has eroded by hatred of colored immigrants. Secretly such factories sprang up in many places. Those factories tested more advanced technologies than Greece.

Little by little, all people of color disappeared from the cities of Europe.

Some worried about the missing persons kept silent for fear of life. Those who spoke out against it were arrested and sent to see the movie overnight.

6.5 Norway

As the clouds kissed and covered the earth so that no one nearby could find them, she continued her rhythm as she descended from the sky and embraced the ground, pouring out her moisture and kissing. Some of the streetlights disappeared unnoticed, and nearby streetlights also glowed like fireflies. The cupids and smokescreens of that nature make it very convenient for what they will do.

The situation in Norway is also changing rapidly. The fact that anything could happen at any time frightened the colored immigrants. Norway sent back colored immigrants as many people as possible to repatriate. Those in abundance confines to the camp. Rumors were circulating among the colored immigrants that they, too, were now being secretly taken somewhere.

Police began their work as planned that night. The order given to them was not to show any kindness. There was no expectation to Vignesh and Thiri that this would take place so ghastly. At night the police knocked on the door, and they were stunned. Those who came issued orders without any mercy. They had automatic rifles in their hands to add power to those commands. The guards hurried the two to get dressed. Thiri felt they would drag her if it delays.

When Thiri boldly asked why we should come now, he said, 'We need to inquire about the demonstration made while sending the refugees.' They laughed. 'Why an investigation now into a demonstration that once ended?' She did not understand then. She asked ten questions of those who came to arrest and answered only one question with indifference. After that, Thiri became silent in disgust. She didn't seem surprised if even the guns spoke during this time.

Vignesh has not spoken since his arrest. Though he was not greatly concerned about himself, it was excruciating to think about his daughter's life.

It was only when the police loaded the two of them on a bus that they realized it was not an arrest made for the demonstration. It was clear then that the effect of the arrest was only on the color of the skin. Police loaded many innocent Muslim families on the bus regardless of age. They also did not understand what was going on and look paralyzed like sheep being transport to a slaughterhouse. Lines of humanity and cruelty eradicate in this country, and that caused Thiri to worry a lot. Some Muslims on the bus were outraged that this was an event no one could have imagined. The guards handcuffed the most enraged. They then put a foot cuffed on the protesters. Thiri observed that the handcuffed handcuffs plastically like, so foot cuffed. To Vignesh, it seemed to be the nature of the European soil. He thought about what he forgot had happened, and it must be happening again. He does not understand why the victim must be the only one who has sinned in all ways.

They picked up everyone on the bus and drove to the new port. It was several miles away from Oslo. At the foot of the mountain, the sea overflowed a little. It looked like the port was being built there for some new purpose. Police parked the bus at the dock with heavy security. A modern ship was waiting for those who came to that port.

On the bus; All who were there safely unload. Armed security there is getting tighter. The escaper will have to sacrifice the escaper's life if anyone tries to escape. Passengers instruct to go to the theater on that modern ship, and the boys and girls jumped for joy and ran to see the movie. It showed how easily a man could deceive and lead a man to death. They gave snacks and soft drinks to the boys and girls who jumped and ran.

Thiri was in a chair holding Daddy's hand. Near her was Vignesh, unmovable and shocked. She looked at Dad and said, 'This is our last moment Dad.'

She knew what was going on in Greece and other European countries. Vignesh cried. The unstoppable silver lines from the eyes went unimpeded towards the ground. 'Forgive me for getting you into this Europe.' He took her hand and kissed her. Then he cried out in agony. Her hands were wet with his tears. She, too, could not bear to hug Dad and cry. The final moments of impending doom killed them atomically.

Others understood what the work of this theater was. They said their last prayer. Understandable and unbelievers alike watched the movie with gusto.

The weeding out of Europe also encouraged the far right in the United States. They also attacked people of color. Committed murders. The US government was shocked by the news coming from Europe.

It is not ready to accept that this is happening in its own country. The United States has tightened laws against all forms of racial oppression. It gave harsh punishments to those who spoke out for racism and incited violence. The far-right has frozen its operations in the wake of the US crackdown. The United States has since stepped in to control what is happening in Europe.

Enemies, the United States and China were the first to unite on the issue. It was co-sponsored by several Asian, African, and Latin American countries, including India, Russia, and Japan. They made many decisions at the conference they held. It concludes by resurrecting the UN and investigating humanitarian crimes in European countries. The second is the decision to suspend the EU. It also ends up imposing severe sanctions on countries that deny it. The war ended with the subjugation of nations that continued to kill people of color. Many countries, including the United States, China, Russia, and India, have stated that they will use atomic bombs for this purpose.

Europe was blind to the fact that this was just a statement. The United States and its current allies were urgently engaged in war preparations. For that, they once again detonated a huge hydrogen atomic bomb in Alaska. The United States has since dropped the report, saying it was a typical experiment. European countries that killed people of color must stop everything or detonate nuclear bombs over non-treaty countries. After that, the European countries, realizing the reserve's devastation, prepared to sign one by one.

Many of the far-right was subsequently arrested and brought before the resurrected International Court of Justice. Also, get those responsible for the Indo-Pakistani war there. There were dos proper investigations against them. Punishments meted out for insulting humanity. Many of their parties were permanently banned.

Subsequent severe economic downturns hit Europe. Simultaneously, the tragedy of not having anyone look after the growing elderly in Europe continued. They were primarily responsible for the economic downturn. As the number of young people decreased, so did the number of people who could work. It further and further severely affected the economy and social services.

They needed more young people to meet the needs of Europe. Despite that strength in Asia and elsewhere, history prevented them from going to Europe. They force to be sent to Asia to care for the elderly from Europe. Many European countries lacked economic facilities. Simultaneously, the Asian, African, and Latin American economies began to grow very strongly.

Europe was unable to meet many of its needs on its own, making many concessions to immigrants in an attempt to impress them. People of color do not want to leave their respective countries in their countries' economic development. They do not seek out trouble like a cat burns its foot in an oven will not go again there. It caused the great human tragedy in Europe.
